HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY, having spent the last Ten Years in improving upon the ordinary Harmonium, has succeeded in bringing out an Instrument, nearly approaching the tone of the Organ; the harsh and reedy tone which has hitherto been so great an objection in other Harmoniums is entirely obviated, and although the Bass is deep, full, and round, yet the Treble is always predominant, and through the careful voicing of the reeds, the articulation is fully equal to that of the Piano.
Lists of PRICES, with testimonials, to be had on application to
W. HATTERSLEY,
HARMONIUM MANUFACTURER,
95, MEADOW-STREET, SHEFFIELD.
N.B.—Harmoniums made to any Size, or to any Design, on the Premises.

"There is much to be said in favour of these graceful little pianoforte pieces, by a writer whose name is new to us. It is true that they are small in construction; but they will be welcome to teachers who are seeking for progressive music, where the passages are elegant, and written for small hands. . . It would be unjust to conclude our notice without a good word upon the manner in which the eye, as well as the ear, of the young student, is appealed to in these pieces. We do not usually like illustrated title pages upon musical compositions; but anything so beautiful as these coloured views of places in some way connected with the opera upon which the piece is founded, we have rarely, if ever, met with, issued from a music publisher."—Musical Times, Dec. 1, 1868.

BEETHOVEN.*

By Henry C. Lunn.

Dr. Ferdinand Hiller in his Essay, "Quasi Fantasia," which commences this volume, says, "The year 1749 brought us Goethe; 1756 Mozart; 1759 Schiller; and 1770 Beethoven. Thus, within the short space of twenty-one years, four of the greatest poetic geniuses were born—four men of whom not only the German Fatherland, but all mankind must be proud." This is written by a German, and expresses the national estimate of the real place of the great composers of the world. But have we yet advanced to any such opinion in this country? True, it may be, that we pride ourselves upon our love for the most important compositions of Beethoven; and some people there are, even amongst musical amateurs, who have arrived at a due comprehension of their wondrous beauties; but after all, with many, this admiration, of which we hear so much, is a mere fashion, and nothing that is a mere fashion comes from the heart. "Genius it is," says Dr. Hiller, "that gives us, if but for a few short hours, that which the believer awaits with earnest hope in another and a better world;" and if we believe that a poet, in the truest sense of the word, is one who embodies the highest and noblest thought in the language of his nature, then must we rank Beethoven, not only amongst the greatest composers, but amongst the greatest poets the world has yet seen. Admitting, however, that some such feeling as this is gradually gaining ground with a small portion of the English public, what progress has it made with painters, sculptors, literary men and statesmen? What Englishman, eminent as a creator in any of the so-called "Fine Arts," will admit that an equally eminent creator of music is on a level with himself? What British statesman will boldly advocate the necessity of recognizing music by the same governmental assistance which is accorded to other arts and sciences? Ignorance in music is at present scarcely considered a reproach to the mental capacity of our native "great men," the few who admit the power of the art being the exception, and not the rule. Germans may rank Goethe, Mozart, Schiller, and Beethoven, on an equality; but before any such feeling can prevail in England, a knowledge of the most profound musical works must become more general, and the lives, thoughts, and high aspirations of their composers must be read and studied, more especially by those who, from their position in the world of art, necessarily exert an intellectual influence over the general public.

It is with a sincere conviction of this fact, that we cordially welcome any healthy addition to the literature of the art. The translations of German works bearing upon music and its professors, recently published in this country, have already done something towards educating many persons to a higher appreciation of the compositions of the great masters, and of the nature of the men who produced them. The correspondence of Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Bach, and others, may now be had at most of our circulating libraries; and many idlers at the sea-side linger over Mendelssohn's letters, as over the last new novel. Biographies, too, are slowly but surely informing the music-loving public how the most eminent composers lived for their art, and of the manner in which their labours have too often been but coldly repaid by a world which they have done so much to ennoble and refine. But many there are who love to get all this information in as concise a form as possible; and as it is better that people should read a small book on the subject than none at all, any person who will undertake the task of condensing the matter contained in the larger works, confers a real boon upon society. The volume before us may be recommended with confidence as an excellent specimen of what the author candidly announces in his preface—"a slight résumé of the principal events in the master's life from the works of Schindler, Ries, and Wegeler, and more especially from Marx and Thayer." It is carefully written; and, although showing the fervour of an artist, the style is free from that inflated bombast so often observable in works of this class. The sketch of Beethoven's ancestors goes far back enough for the purpose; and it is well said, that the Viennese admirers of the composer who could not imagine that his aristocratic tendencies were compatible with a plebeian origin, must have been sorely downcast when they found that his parents were a tenor singer of the Electoral Chapel, and the daughter of the head cook to his Grace the Archbishop of Treves. The desire of young Ludwig's father to imitate the Mozarts by exhibiting his precocious son in public for money, no doubt contributed a great deal to lay the foundation of an irascible and obstinate temper which, with all his good qualities, he could not in after life shake off. When only five years of age, we are told, the boy was kept at the pianoforte morning, noon, and night; and "many a time was the little Ludwig seen in tears, standing on a raised bench before his pianoforte, thus early serving his apprenticeship to grief." Had all this drudgery been forced upon the child for any artistic purpose, the harshness resorted to might have been partially forgiven; but unfortunately the truth is too well known, that the sole object of such relentless conduct was to use up the genius of the son to pay for the intemperate habits of the father. Luckily, however, it was seen that, even for this purpose, it would be necessary to seek some better instruction; and although under Pfeiffer and Van den Eeden he no doubt gained some knowledge, it was not until he was placed with Neefe (who notwithstanding that he was somewhat cold and formal in his teaching, evidently discovered the possession of exceptional power in his young pupil) that his talents were really directed into the right channel. The early part of the composer's life seemed doomed to be sorrowful. At thirteen years of age he was nominated officially to a post he had long occupied in reality—that of assistant organist to his master Neefe, who, in the service of the Elector, Max Friedrich, found his duties press too heavily upon him, having not only to play the organ, but to direct an operatic company, which was supported by the Elector. The death of Max Friedrich, however, rendered Beethoven's services no longer necessary; and as it is known that he looked forward to the salary of this new office as a means of partially helping his mother in the support of her increasing family, and that his father was now an irreclaimable drunkard, it may be imagined that the future presented to the young artist was indeed a gloomy one. That he acted as nobly in this emergency, as he did in after years, when the care of his profligate nephew pressed heavily upon him, is proved by every record of the time. For upwards of a twelvemonth he materially contributed to the support of the household—most probably by giving lessons—and it was not until his appointment as assistant organist to the new Elector, Max Franz, with the annual salary of a hundred thalers, that he again breathed an artistic atmosphere. His journey to Vienna, where he played before Mozart—improvising upon a given theme so wonderfully, as to excite the admiration of the master—gave an impetus to his ambition, which must have been sadly checked by his sudden return to his own home, where he only arrived in time to be present at the death-bed of his mother, whom he evidently clung to with the most ardent affection. We have little doubt that his visit to Vienna, where Gluck, Haydn, and Mozart were then resident, had been a long cherished dream; and that he had been gradually saving up money from his small earnings for the purpose. That all his means were thoroughly exhausted, even before he left that city, may be seen from the following passage in his letter to M. de Schaden, counsellor at Augsburg: "With regard to your extreme kindliness and friendliness in lending me three carolins in Augsburg, I must beg you still to have a little indulgence with me, as my journey cost me a great deal, and here I have not the slightest prospect of earning anything. Fate is not propitious to me here in Bonn."

We linger with much interest over the early days of Beethoven, because we there see how his better nature was blighted, even in his boyhood. Whilst he was yearning for parental love, he was tyrannised over by a drunken father, who, for his own selfish purposes, almost bound him to his pianoforte, and actually for the time succeeded in making him detest an art which he was formed by nature to glorify. His fondness for his mother seemed the only solace of his youth. In the letter to M. de Schaden, already quoted from, he writes: "Ah! who was happier than I, so long as I could still pronounce the sweet name of mother, and heard the answer! and to whom can I now say it? To the silent images resembling her, which my fancy presents to me." and this is the man in whose nature, it has often been said, sympathy with others existed not: strange, indeed, does it seem that we are only just beginning to understand that during his whole life, he was earnestly seeking after that affection which, by some fortuitous chain of circumstances, he seemed destined never to obtain: "Educate your daughter carefully," he says in a letter to Frau von Streicher, "that she may make a good wife. To-day happens to be Sunday, so I will quote you something out of the Bible—'Love one another.'"

It must have been a sad parting, when Beethoven took leave of the Breuning family, Count Waldstein, and many others, who were gradually appreciating his wonderful talents, and went for the second time to Vienna, for the purpose of studying under Haydn. We can readily imagine that, with such a master, the young and enthusiastic artist believed that he should develop his powers in the most legitimate manner, and that Haydn would take the utmost interest in his progress. From some cause, however, we know that this was not the case; and that a coldness sprang up between them which seems almost unaccountable. When, therefore, on Haydn's departure from the city, Beethoven placed himself under the instruction of Albrechtsberger, it may almost be said that he really commenced anything like serious and systematic study. That he worked hard under the strict discipline of his new teacher is the more creditable, seeing that his genius soon convinced him, that many of the rules laid down as infallible had been written by pedants for the sake of keeping the art within the narrow limits in which they had found it. And yet, innovator as the young student was, even at this time, who can gainsay the truth of these remarks, selected from scribblings on his Exercises in Thorough-bass, published after his death by the Chevalier von Seyfried?

"Time goes on; and what sufficed for one age, appears to the next a woeful shortcoming. Let me not be supposed to advocate an impertinent contempt of the great principles of art, which are unchangeable; I would only say that as time advances, art also advances in many things. Invention and fancy must not be denied the rights and privileges of which schoolmen, theorists, and barren critics would gladly deprive them."

How this feeling actuated him in the production of his finest works, is shown by the reply he gave to a friend, who, speaking of his second and third "Leonora" overtures, remarked that "an artist must create in freedom, only giving in to the spirit of his age, and be monarch over his own materials."

"Granted," replied Beethoven; "but he must not give in to the spirit of his age, otherwise it is all over with originality. . . . Had I written them (the two overtures) in the spirit that prevailed at the time, they would certainly have been understood at once; as, for example, the Storm of Kotzeluch. But I cannot cut and carve out my works according to the fashion, as they would fain have me do. Freshness and originality create themselves, without thinking about it."

At Vienna, the friendship of the Baron von Swieten and Prince Lichnowski tended much towards placing him in a good position with the leading families of the city, and also incited him to develop his powers as a composer; for Prince Lichnowski, especially, was a man of artistic and cultivated taste, and many of Beethoven's works were performed for the first time at his residence. We have already said that in everything, save the pursuit of his art, the composer appeared destined to encounter obstacles which fall to the lot of but few. At the height of his success, that worst of all maladies to a musician, incurable deafness, removed him from society, and so utterly crushed his mind for the time that, in a letter to Wegeler, he writes, "If I had not read somewhere that man must not of his own free will depart this life, I should long ere this have been no more, and that through my own act." To add to his misery, his two brothers, Carl and Johann, resolved to build up their fortunes by negociating themselves with the music publishers for the sale of his compositions, and there is every reason to suppose that they reaped a very handsome sum for their disinterested exertions. At all events, we know that Johann became so intoxicated with his wealth and position, that on one occasion he sent in a card to Ludwig, on which was inscribed, "Johann van Beethoven, Land Proprietor," which was immediately returned to him by the composer, with "Ludwig van Beethoven, Brain Proprietor," written on the other side.

We do not here intend to enter upon any critical analysis of Beethoven's works. The cold annotators upon his compositions who were nurtured in the severe school preceding the career of so grand a genius, and the deeply imaginative and enthusiastic modern writers who endeavour to discover the profoundest hidden meaning in every passage he wrote, may be equally liable to error. The age of opponents and partizans must die off, before so original and daring a thinker can be correctly estimated; and that we have not arrived at that time in England, may be proved by the fact of his colossal Mass in D being still attacked when presented in this country, whilst in Germany it is ranked amongst the sublimest efforts of his genius.

It is probable that many of the facts we have mentioned in the course of our extracts and remarks upon Mr. Graeme's Memoir—a book rendered doubly valuable by the addition of Dr. Hiller's excellent essay—may be known to a large number of our readers; but although, as we have said, we must still class some of his later works amongst the "music of the future" in England, there is no reason why his character should be judged at that indefinite period; and we have, therefore, seized upon every opportunity of showing how that misanthropic and gloomy state of mind, which gradually grew upon him, was thoroughly opposed to his real nature. That he was constantly struggling with his malady, and anxious that the world should judge him as he really was, is evidenced in many of his communications to his most intimate friends, and especially in the document addressed to his brothers, in which he formally disposes of his property, some sentences from which we extract:—

"O ye, who consider, or represent me as unfriendly, morose, and misanthropical, how unjust are you to me! You know not the secret cause of what appears thus to you. My heart and mind have been from childhood given up to the tender feeling of benevolence, and I have ever been disposed to accomplish something great."

"Born with a passionate, lively temperament, keenly susceptible to the pleasures of society, I was obliged at an early age to isolate myself, and to pass my life in loneliness."

"My brothers, Carl and —, as soon as I am dead, if Professor Schmidt be still alive, beg him, in my name, to describe my disease, and then add these pages to the history of my malady, that, at least so far as possible, the world may be reconciled to me after my death.

That these words may speak to the hearts of the thousands who appreciate his works, must be the earnest wish of all who honour and revere the name of Beethoven.

JOULE'S ANTHEM BOOK.

In the article on "Clifford's Anthem Book," in the February number of the Musical Times, the list of "collections of value," should have included the above-named book. But the omission at that time affords an opportunity for speaking specially of the claim which the work has to being considered a collection of merit. In the first place, it is considerably larger than any other existing, and being arranged upon a good plan, is well fitted for general use. The number of anthems includes nearly all the settings daily sung, specially written to certain words, as well as many adaptations, which are frequently employed in many of the places where choral service is the ordinary custom. It is equally available for choirs with a large, as well as for those with a limited repertory, for such as encourage ancient and modern original compositions as for those that are content with mere adaptations.

The collection is now twelve years old, and the great number of anthems added since its publication would, if a new edition became necessary, probably swell the book still more; not by adding much to the biographical notices, for there are very few composers who have written much since that time that are not mentioned, but by the addition of texts that have not been before set to music, and by the insertion of some of the words of older anthems that have been revived into use. The preface shows the compiler to be a scholar and a good churchman; and the biographical notices are in the main correct, interesting and carefully brought together, and a careful examination will prove the book to be as useful as an anthology of scriptural passages, as it is valuable as a collection of the words of anthems.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The two movements from Mr. Henry Gadsby's Symphony, produced at the Saturday Concerts at this establishment, although fragments of a work, which can only fairly be judged in its entirety, are good enough to merit praise on their own account. The Larghetto is melodious and skilfully instrumented, and the Scherzo shows much inventive power, which appears to have been trained in the right direction. A prominent feature in the selection of music during the past month, was the fine performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, by Madame Schumann; and we must also record the decided success of a new soprano singer, Madame Cora de Wilhorst, who especially in a cavatina from Meyerbeer's "Il Crociato in Egitto," displayed an excellent style, and considerable dramatic power. One of the most interesting of the great orchestral works was Spohr's Symphony, "Die Weihe der Töne," which, although perhaps scarcely fulfilling the grandeur of purpose which the subject demands, is unquestionably a composition of the highest character, and played as it was by Mr. Manns's carefully trained band, can never fail to ensure a welcome. The concerts have been, as usual, excellently attended.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

The performance of Bach's Matthew Passion music on the 15th ult., at St. James's Hall, was a worthy inauguration of the third season of these excellent concerts. The interest awakened by the presentation of this sublime work at the Oratorio Concerts last year, seems to have strengthened, as we anticipated, on its repetition; for not only was the room crowded in every part, but rarely indeed have we seen so many eminent artists assembled; and considering the deeply sacred character of the composition, it may fairly be said that the enthusiastic applause with which it was received throughout was indeed a hopeful sign of the effect which such music, so finely performed, and so patiently listened to, cannot fail to produce upon an intelligent audience. It is happily now unnecessary to enlarge upon the manner in which Bach has treated a subject which it were sacrilege for any but the highest order of genius to grapple with; gradually the English public is becoming aware how music in the hands of a priest in the art can be made to deepen that devotional feeling, without which religion is but an empty form; and there can be little doubt that this work having once made its way to the hearts of the few, time only is required to extend its powerful influence to the many. Earnestly, therefore, we hope that the projectors of these concerts, to whom music-lovers already owe so much, will increase the debt of gratitude by persevering in repeating, as often as possible, a composition so beneficial both to true art and true religion.

In many respects the execution of the choral music was superior to that of last year, partly, perhaps, because the choir had become more familiarized with its complicated details, and could, therefore, bestow increased attention upon the various shades of expression. This was especially observable in the chorales, which were given with a minute observance of the graduations of tone which produced a marked effect upon the listeners; indeed, finer chorus singing, we venture to assert, has never been heard in this country, and it was with the utmost difficulty that Mr. Barnby could at all adhere to his determination to avoid encores, a resolution which, however, was compelled to give way before the simultaneous demand for a repetition of the overpowering chorus, "Have lightnings and thunders in clouds disappeared?" which was sung with marvellous precision and effect. The opening chorus, "Come ye daughters," and the choral portions, which are interwoven with the solos, were also given with equal success; every gradation of tone, from the merest whisper to the most decisive fortissimo, being remarkable for a well balanced quality, which, with so large a choir, is rarely obtained. Madame Rudersdorff, and Mr. W. H. Cummings, who sang in the work last year, were thoroughly successful in all the solos allotted to them; the beautiful airs, "Break and die," and "Although mine eyes," being given by Madame Rudersdorff with the truest pathetic expression, and the whole of the tenor recitatives receiving the utmost justice from Mr. Cummings, who appeared throughout deeply impressed with the sublimity of the music. Madame Patey's exquisite voice was heard to the greatest advantage in the contralto solos, especially in the air, "Have mercy" (which we are glad to see given to the contralto, instead of the soprano, as on the last representation of the work), and the air, with chorus, "Alas, now, is my Saviour gone." Herr Stockhausen gave a German reading of the principal bass part, so truly artistic as greatly to enhance the general effect, although we have no doubt that, to a certain extent, his intention was defeated by the language in which he had to sing. A good word must also be said for Mr. J. T. Beale, who sang some of the bass recitatives with excellent expression. The band was thoroughly efficient, and included most of the finest orchestral performers of the day, amongst whom we must mention Mr. Pollitzer, whose violin obbligato to the air "Have mercy," was remarkable for delicacy and precision of intonation. Mr. Barnby conducted with a care and judgment which materially conduced to the general excellence of the performance; Signor Randegger presided most efficiently at the pianoforte, and accompanied those recitatives which are unscored, and Mr. Docker was a most able and conscientious organist.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CONCERT.

The sixteenth season of these concerts commenced at St. James's Hall on the 9th ult., the programme being eminently calculated to display the careful training of the choir formed and presided over for so many years by Mr. Leslie. The old madrigals were excellently sung, especially "As Vesta was descending" (Weelkes), and "Flow, O my tears" (Benet). Amongst the modern compositions, we may mention Goss's beautiful glee, "There is beauty;" "How sweet the moonlight," by Henry Leslie, and Professor Bennett's charmingly refined part-song, "Come live with me," as perfect specimens of delicate part-singing. Mr. Sims Reeves, in spite of his evident hoarseness, sang, with his usual expression, Bishop's "Pilgrim of love," and the hackneyed "Come into the garden, Maud;" but Mr. Leslie's "Annabelle Lee," for which he was also announced, was given to a young tenor, Mr. Mars, from Milan, who pleased the audience so much as to receive an enthusiastic encore. Mr. Santley made quite an effect in a clever song by Mr. Leslie, called "The boatswain's leap" (the last verse being repeated by general desire); and also created a marked impression in Gounod's "Nazareth." The other vocalist was Miss Ellen Horne, who received warm and deserved applause for her rendering of Bishop's "Love has eyes." Master Charles Le Jeune played, with much skill, an Introduction and Fugue of his own on the organ, strangely enough, taking the "March of the British Grenadiers," for his subject, and an Allegro in B minor on the pianoforte, with his brother Arthur (the composition of the latter), which, although a duet, employed only three hands. Mr. Leslie conducted as usual. Mr. Callcott presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. C. Ward at the organ.

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION.

The new entertainment called "A Sensation Novel," by Mr. W. S. Gilbert, recently produced at this establishment, is scarcely of sufficient musical importance to claim anything like a lengthened notice in our pages. We may say, however, that both the songs and concerted pieces have at least the merit of melodiousness; and one ballad, "No father's care," excellently sung by Miss Fanny Holland, is exceedingly graceful. There is much originality in the notion of making the characters in the novel meet between the writing of the volumes to discuss their probable future actions in the work; and a great deal of clever satire upon sensational literature is scattered throughout the piece, all of which was thoroughly appreciated by the audience. The principal parts were well sustained by Mr. and Mrs. German Reed, Miss Fanny Holland, Mr. Arthur Cecil, and Mr. Corney Grain. The whole of the music is composed by Mr. German Reed; and the scenery, which is really beautifully painted, is supplied by Mr. J. O'Connor.

We are authorised to state that a solemn penitential service will be held, in Westminster Abbey, on Thursday evening, April 6, the musical portion of which will consist of Bach's sublime setting of the Passion of Our Lord (according to the Gospel of St. Matthew), which will be rendered by a full orchestra and chorus. The sermon will be preached by the Very Reverend the Dean.

At the first Philharmonic concert, which takes place on Wednesday, the 8th inst., a Saltarello, composed by M. Gounod expressly for the occasion, will be performed for the first time. This composition is gracefully dedicated to Mr. W. G. Cusins, the talented conductor of the Society's concerts. A selection from M. Gounod's works will also form a portion of the programme; and it is announced that the composer has accepted the invitation to conduct.

Herr Gustave Küster gave a concert on the 9th ult., at Victoria Hall, Westbourne Grove, assisted by the following vocalists: Madame Poole, Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Louisa Beverley, Miss Emrick, Mr. Theodore Distin, and Mr. Charles Braid. The solo instrumental performers were Madlle. Helene de Katow (violoncello), Madlle. Christine Michelin (pianoforte), and Herr Gustave Küster (violin). The programme was well selected, and gave thorough satisfaction to the audience, Madlle. de Katow being encored for her excellent performance of a solo by her master, Servais, and Herr Küster receiving well-deserved applause, both for his playing of the Allegro and Andante from De Beriot's Seventh Concerto, and for his artistic rendering of the violin part in Beethoven's Trio in C minor, in which he was joined by Madlle. Michelin, and Mdlle. de Katow.

The second concert of the Brixton Choral Society took place at the Angell Town Institution on the 13th ult., when Handel's Oratorio, "Judas Maccabæus," was performed with a success which reflected the very highest credit upon the indefatigable conductor, Mr. Lemare, and every member of his choir. There was an excellent band, led by Mr. Willy. The principal vocalists were Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Adelaide Newton, Mr. G. Perren, and Mr. Lawler, and their efforts were so successful that had the conductor chosen to comply with the demands of the audience, much of the solo music would have been repeated. We trust that Mr. Lemare will adhere to his plan of resisting encores, and that, more especially in sacred music, his example will be extensively followed.

The fourth series of the "Musical Evenings," for the performance of Chamber Music, commenced at St. George's Hall on the 26th January, when an excellent programme was provided. Haydn's Quartet in B flat (No. 1, Book 9) and a Sextet in the same key for two violins, two violas and two violoncellos, by Brahms, were interesting features in the selection, the latter work receiving so much justice at the hands of Messrs. Henry Holmes, Folkes, Burnett, Hann, Signor Pezze, and Mr. Charles Ould as to excite considerable attention, even amongst those who are least disposed to admit the claims of "Young Germany:" the Scherzo was encored. Mr. Shedlock proved himself an able pianist in Schubert's Sonata in A minor, for pianoforte and violin, and he was excellently supported by Mr. Henry Holmes, who at all these concerts holds the post of first violin. The Misses Ferrari were the vocalists; and we are glad to record that their success was as decisive as it was deserved. In Rubinstein's Duet, "The Angel," they were especially effective, and received an unanimous encore. The principal pieces of the second concert were Beethoven's Trio in E flat, for violin, viola, and violoncello; a Quintet by G. A. Macfarren, for pianoforte, violin, viola, violoncello and contrabasso, and Mozart's String Quartet in C. Mr. Henry Holmes also played in his usual masterly style Spohr's Adagio in E flat, which was much applauded. Miss Megan Watts displayed a well trained voice and true musical feeling in both her songs.

Mr. J. F. Barnett's Cantata, "Paradise and the Peri," was performed for the first time in London at St. James's Hall, on the 14th ult. The merits of the work were fully discussed on its production at the last Birmingham Festival, and we have now only to add a record of its success in the metropolis. The principal vocalists were Madame Vanzini, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Several numbers were encored, amongst which may be mentioned the tenor air, "Oh, if there be," the Quartet (unaccompanied) "She wept," and the eight part chorus (unquestionably the best written piece in the Cantata) "And now, behold him." The composer was called for at the conclusion, and warmly and most deservedly applauded. The principal feature, in the miscellaneous selection which followed was Mr. Barnett's excellent performance of Mendelssohn's second pianoforte Concerto. The band and chorus were thoroughly efficient; and the concert was in every respect a decided success.

The Monthly Concert of the New Polyhymnian Choir was given on Saturday, the 4th ult., in the large school room of the Britannia Fields Chapel, Packington Street. The programme consisted of three Choruses from Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," and a selection of Glees, Part-songs, &c. The most successful pieces were Callcott's Glee, "Are the white hours for ever fled," (excellently sung by four gentlemen whose names were not given), Guglielmo's Song, "The lover and the Bird" (sung by Miss Cullingworth) and a Duet for pianoforte and violin, played by Messrs. King and Box. Mr. Robinson conducted.

We are informed that Mr. J. Barnby's new Sacred Cantata, "Rebekah," will shortly be performed by the Cheltenham Harmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. J. A. Matthews.

Mr. Ridley Prentice commenced a new series of his Monthly Popular Concerts at the Eyre Arms, St. John's Wood, on the 9th ult., with every prospect of success. The programme was a thoroughly classical one, and the principal instrumental artists were Herr Straus (violin), Signor Piatti (violoncello), and Mr. Ridley Prentice (pianoforte). The vocalist was Madame Dowland.

A successful concert was given at the City of London College, on the 26th January, by the Standard Quartet party, with whom were associated Madame Emmeline Cole, and Mr. Henry Parker. The Quartet party, consisting of Messrs. Cooke, Stedman, Frank Massey, and Travers sang several part-songs, Flemming's lovely "Integer vitæ" being especially well received. The solos were numerous and well chosen. Mr. Cooke's singing of Gounod's "Ring on, sweet Angelus" was highly artistic, and Mr. Travers was encored in a humourous song, which was given with good effect. Madame Emmeline Cole, in Wade's ballad, "Love was once a little boy," and Haydn's "My mother bids me bind my hair," displayed a good voice and cultivated style. Mr. Stedman's songs were admirably sung, his greatest success being in Allen's "Far down a valley lonely," and Mr. Frank Massey gave a spirited rendering of Molloy's "Vagabond." Mr. Henry Parker was an efficient accompanist, contributing much to the success of the evening by his performance of one of his own compositions, "The Armourers of the Rhine," and a Fantasia on "Lucia di Lammermoor." The concert concluded with Truhn's "Three chafers."

On Tuesday evening, the 14th ult., the annual pupil concert of the "North-East London Academy of Music" (principals, Mr. and Mrs. W. West) was held in the Manor Rooms, Hackney, the audience being large and select. Amongst those who most distinguished themselves we may mention the Misses Rogers, Cassell, Boyce, Amis, Hughes, and Halley; the Messrs. Knight and Leech, and Master Smith. The programme consisted of an equal portion of vocal and instrumental music, partly classical. The efforts of the young performers were much applauded; and the encores were numerous, and given mostly with judgment.

We are requested to state that the preliminary examination for the degree of Mus. Bac. will be holden in the music-school at Oxford on the 8th inst.

The St. Mary, Hornsey Rise, Choral Society gave its first concert or the second season in the Mission Room, on Friday evening, the 28th January. The principal feature in the first part was Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," the soprano solos being sung by Miss Miéville with much taste and feeling. A selection followed, in which encores were awarded to Mrs. Burgess, Miss Tomalin, and Captain Phillips (who gave much effect to Rossini's terzetto, "L'usato ardir"), and to Mr. Burgess Perry for his admirable singing of "Che farò." Miss Tomalin delighted her hearers by her artistic rendering of Gounod's "Christian Mors;" and the execution of the choruses reflected the greatest credit on the conductor, Mr. J. Parry Cole.

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Don Giovanni. An Opera in two acts, by W. A Mozart. Translated into English, and corrected according to the original score, by Natalia Macfarren.

Mozart's masterpiece, with the musical drama complete, so beautifully printed, and at a nominal price, is indeed an earnest of the universality to which our culture is tending, of which the motto would seem to be "All for each." Did this edition as much exceed in price, as it falls in this respect below all others having any claims to attention, it would yet deserve a place in every student's library, for the sake of the very many new and invaluable lights that we gain from it as to notes, phrasing, light and shade, and stage directions. Glancing merely at the list of personages in the Opera, we are struck by the "Chorus of Invisible Demons," and turning to the only scene where demons are likely to appear, we are delighted to learn that the curious beings who frolic about our stage at the conclusion of the Opera, have no warrant from Mozart for their appearance, but fall into the large class of "improvements" (generally for the worse) with which singers, acting managers, and editors have so richly embellished our standard musical works. We have here, for the first time, the stage directions from Mozart himself, and they are so interesting that it seems a marvel that any reprint of the Opera should have dispensed with them.

Those who admit that phrasing is to music what punctuation is to writing, will feel grateful also for the care bestowed on this feature of the present edition. Some thoroughly false methods of writing music have become prevalent in this country; such, for instance, as when an accented note is preceded by a run of two, three, or more notes, the slurring of the run separately, without including the accented notes, thereby suggesting that such accented note should be detached from the run. Another is the slurring of all notes of voice parts where two or more fall to one syllable, whatever the character of the phrase may be; indeed, placing slurs indiscriminately over any number of notes anywhere, as we see in all but the best German editions of recent times. Staccato marks again seem to be strangely misunderstood. The sign for detaching with accent, for instance, which should only be used in passages of energy, is constantly put over delicate, florid passages. Our signs should lead, whereas they often mislead; and thus, through the carelessness, or ignorance of musicians in these things, instead of clearly pointing out the author's intention, they often cause endless confusion and perplexity with the general public. To study the slurs and dots of Mozart is to study the art of phrasing. His system of binding and detaching the notes in the instruments is such as to render his phrases invariably intelligible to the musical understanding, and in the voice parts they are invaluable guides to the singers, as to when to detach, and when to unite the sounds. We are indebted to this edition, too, for a knowledge of many beautiful points of declamation, such as the three bars before the return to the subject, in the aria "Mi tradi;" a similar variety of expression two bars before the return in "Non mi dir;" the irregularity of rhythm in both these cases greatly heightens the expression; but as vocalists have probably not understood it, a more commonplace reading has been always substituted. We notice an entirely different distribution of syllables on the quavers in the last movement of "Fuggi crudele," and one that promises more tone in the marvellous passage where they occur, than when the voice parts are cut up with a syllable on every alternate note: it would be very interesting to hear it as Mozart intended this passage should be sung. We should far exceed the space at our command were we to enumerate the varieties of reading that we encounter in this valuable edition, but they are well worthy of study. There are some curious details in the distribution of the syllables, such as in the first bar of "Non mi dir;" and in the seventh of "Dalla sua pace;" where although we are accustomed to hear the unaccented syllable on the fourth division of the bar, Mozart places it on the half bar, thus sacrificing accent to smoothness of tone. It is also pleasant to see "Vedrai carino" merely superscribed "grazioso," instead of the invariable "andante," which, in the modern view of "andante," causes the light, playful movement to be mostly taken at so sluggish and mournful a pace, as quite to destroy the character of the piece. Several of the movements in common time, we may also mention, are here marked "alla breve" for the first time, which conductors would do well to note.

We must not conclude our notice of this edition without awarding unqualified praise to the editress for her very excellent English translation of the original text. It is easy enough to give a bald rendering of the Italian words into the vernacular, but to supply a faithful translation which shall be in rhyme, and yet carefully adapted, not only to every note, but to every accent intended by the composer is no easy task. We could give innumerable instances of the happy manner in which the words and notes are united; one, however, must suffice. Let any vocalist sing the first phrase of the Canzonetta, "Deh vieni," to the words "From out thy casement glancing, O smile upon me," and he will see that the English is almost as vocal as the Italian, and that the accent is preserved with scrupulous fidelity. When we say also that, in addition to the new features already mentioned, all the recitatives are given for the first time, and that in every respect the Opera appears precisely as Mozart wrote it, there can be no question that this edition is the most perfect ever yet issued.

Scherzo, from Beethoven's Trio, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello. (Op. 9, No. 1.)

No. 4 of Robert Schumann's Skizzen für den Pedal Flügel. (Sketches for the Pedal Pianoforte.)

Arranged for the Pianoforte by Agnes Zimmermann.

A great part of the modern music may be compared to imitation jewellery, which passes in a crowd and excites little attention, whilst the treasures of the art, like old family jewels, handed down from generation to generation, will always command both respect and admiration, even from those whose tastes are vitiated by the glittering ephemeral manufactures of the day. Those who desire the healthy progress of music must be aware how necessary it is that students should constantly have before them the compositions of the best writers; and we are glad to find that Miss Zimmermann, who has already given us some excellent arrangements from the works of J. S. Bach, is gradually enriching her series of classical extracts, all of which we need scarcely say are so skilfully adapted for the pianoforte as to render them welcome not only to musicians as reminiscences of the originals, but to teachers who desire that their pupils should be trained in a good school. The Menuetto from the Trio (Op. 9, No. 2) makes a highly attractive piece, and is moreover by no means difficult to play; the passages lie well under the hand, and it is so carefully arranged as to have the effect of being an original pianoforte piece. The pleasing character of the subject of this Minuet will no doubt make it one of the most popular of the set. The Polacca, from the Serenade, will give the performer something more to do, several extensions being absolutely necessary; but the part-writing is so excellently divided between the hands that the player is saved as much trouble as possible. Apart from the intrinsic worth of this piece, it will form a most useful study both for touch and fingering. The melodious Scherzo, from the Trio (Op. 9, No. 1) contains no passage that is not comfortably within the reach of even moderate players. The three parts are so minutely indicated that it will be the fault of the performer if they are not clearly brought out. One of the most interesting of all the pieces is the arrangement of Robert Schumann's sketch for the pedal pianoforte. The management of the pedal part is so remakably clever that the original effect is almost perfectly preserved throughout. This will also form a capital exercise for students; and the admirers of Schumann will thank Miss Zimmermann for placing this beautiful trifle within the reach of performers on our ordinary pianofortes. Before we conclude our notice of these compositions, we must mention that the touch is most clearly expressed in each part; that wherever there might be a doubt, the hand which is intended to play the notes is distinctly indicated, and in every passage requiring such assistance the fingering is given.

Blonde and Brunette. Two Sketches for the Pianoforte. By J. Baptiste Calkin. Op. 79.

Mr. Calkin's Sketches, the first in G major and the second in G minor, are as different in character as the imaginary beauties in whose honour they are written; and that listeners will differ as to the superiority of the one over the other is only a proof of that wholesome diversity of taste which secures to every pretty girl, whatever may be her complexion, a fair share of attention. The first is light and graceful in the extreme; and the subject leads us to imagine that the "Blonde" is somewhat of a coquette at heart. The accompaniment of four quavers in the bar, divided between the two hands, is continued throughout, and there is just sufficient modulation to prevent any undue monotony. The lengthening out of the theme towards the conclusion is extremely happy. There is much pathos in the melody of the second piece, and the harmonies are bold and appropriate. A good effect is gained where the staccato quaver accompaniment is interrupted by the arpeggio for the left hand; and the spirited wind-up forms an excellent contrast with the placid coda of the first sketch. Trifles like these thrown off by an artist who has shown that he can grapple with more solid works, must always make their way through the crowd; for although songs "without words," they are by no means without ideas.

Meditation. Caprice for the Pianoforte.

Composed by Willem Coenen.

The theme of the first of these pieces is extremely pleasing, and is effectively given out, after a short introduction, by the right hand with a chord accompaniment for the left hand crossing above it. The arpeggios which ornament the melody will require much rapidity of finger in order to realise the intention of the composer; but pianists of the present day should be pretty well trained to the execution of such embroidery, and the piece will amply repay any trouble bestowed upon it. There is much refinement in the treatment of the subject throughout; and being written by a thoroughly accomplished pianist, it is needless to say that the passages, although difficult, are well adapted to the instrument. The study for the left hand on the well-known melody, "Home, sweet home," will require real hard work and a large amount of patience, even from advanced performers. The manner in which the subject is brought out, whilst surrounded by embellishments is exceedingly ingenious; and it may be confidently stated that, although as we have said, it will demand immense perseverance, there will not be the slightest difficulty in understanding how the passages are to be played. As a study for gaining command with the left hand, this piece will prove of much value.

Short Anthems, or Introits, by various composers, for particular Seasons and for General Use. Edited by Rev. Walter Hook, M.A., Rector of Lavington, formerly Succentor of Chichester, (In 31 numbers.)

That a want has long been felt among those who have the direction of Church Services for some music, either vocal or instrumental, which shall appropriately accompany the entry of the officiating clergy into the Septum, is so evident, that it is difficult to believe that collections of Introits, for use in the English Church, have but lately come into existence. Yet such is the case, and a slight knowledge of the musical arrangements of our Cathedrals and Churches fully explains the reason why. In most Parish Churches a Hymn has filled the place of the Introit; whilst in Cathedrals, a voluntary on the organ, or the singing of the Sanctus, has been its substitute. But, however appropriate a Hymn may be to the day on which it is sung, there seems no reason why a trained parish-choir should not introduce the Introit in its proper place, especially in churches where it has been customary to have two Hymns, one where the Introit should be sung, the other before the Sermon. The congregation would not then be deprived of its looked-for Hymn; while, on the other hand, the choir would have an opportunity of impressing on the hearers, by a good rendering of good music, some important and suitable words gleaned from Holy Scriptures. The most that can be said against the use of an organ voluntary, instead of an Introit, is, that a chance of teaching a truth to the hearers is thus lost; for, supposing the Voluntary to be not only appropriate in style, but devotional and suggestive, it must be acknowledged that it is not in the power of a large section of worshippers, when thrown back on the resources of their own mind, to bring before themselves at the moment such a desirable train of thought as would be suggested by a carefully selected verse from Holy Scriptures. The use of the Sanctus, as an Introit, can on no grounds be defended; for by it the congregation is unable to distinguish between one of the Church Seasons and another; and, moreover, it must so shortly be heard a second time in its legitimate position. Its use in Cathedrals in this manner can only remind those who hear it, that when all are invited to join angels and archangels in the cry of adoration, "Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus," music and musicians will have disappeared; as if art and artists had no part in the highest acts of worship, but were only to be used as a sort of condiment, by means of which a long function might be prevented from becoming tame and tasteless. But better days are, we trust, in store for our Cathedrals. The use of a short Psalm, as prescribed by the first prayer-book of Edward the Sixth, would be infinitely preferable to the misuse of the Sanctus; for these short Psalms are admirably arranged. Formerly they were chanted in the chapel service of Magd. Coll., Oxford.

Mr. Hook, whose interest in church-music and church-musicians is generally known, must be heartily thanked for the care with which he has gathered together holy words for holy days, and the judgment he has shown in the selection of composers to them. It would occupy more space than can be spared, besides involving the risk of tiring most readers, if an account of this interesting collection were given in detail. They need not, however, be grouped under the commonplace heads of good, bad, or indifferent, for they quite exemplify the feelings of various modern musicians on the subject of Style. Some are ecclesiastical, some dramatic, some very like part-songs. Those that are ecclesiastical have the usual faults, as well as the merits of that style. They will be found to contain much simplicity, mixed with an occasional dash of crudity, and generally to exhibit the true contrapuntal disregard of the sense of the words. No. 1, "Rejoice in the Lord" (S. Reay) is smooth, and avoids, to a great extent, the faults we have enumerated. No. 4, "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel" is not lacking in simple vigour; but in more than one place each of the four parts is striving to emphasize different portions of the same sentence. No. 7, "Be not Thou far from me" (F. W. Hird) is not well phrased. No. 8, "Remember, Lord, Thy loving kindness" (C. G.

Verrinder) would be much better without the violent change of key which takes place about ten bars from the close. No. 9, "Mine eyes are ever looking unto the Lord," (E. W. Hamilton) owes it ecclesiastical colouring chiefly to the awkwardness of its phrasing. The author has not rightly distinguished in the eighth, ninth, and tenth bars, between G♮ and F♯. No. 11, "Judge me O God," (Sir F. Ouseley) is severe, but very good of its kind. Nos. 22 and 25, by F. W. Hird and C. G. Verrinder respectively, do not require special notice. No. 27, "We wait for Thy loving kindness," (Philip Armes) is smooth and well written. To those in the dramatic style more praise is due than to those in the early or late ecclesiastical style, excepting perhaps to that by Mr. Verrinder, (No. 2.) "The Light hath shined upon us," in which a high range in the voice parts and sudden chromaticisms produce no adequate effect. No. 3, "While all things were in quiet silence," (G. A. Macfarren) is an admirable composition; nothing can exceed the skill with which great effects are here produced without any tax upon the efforts of the singers or instrumentalist. No. 6, "Behold the Lord, the ruler is come," (E. H. Thorne) is good and effective, but perhaps contains a little too much antithesis between organ and voice parts. Nos. 16 and 17, by the same author, need no special notice, both are good and effective. In No. 26, "The Lord hath brought us into a land," the accompaniment is surely much too elaborate. It would be interesting to hear it played on a Scudamore organ. Although Mr. Thorne deserves the greatest credit for the freedom with which he treats all the words he has hitherto set to music, a warning against allowing freedom to grow into extravagance must be given, and it is hoped will be taken by him in good part. Nos. 12 and 24, both compositions of the editor, possess much merit, the former thoroughly suits Heber's beautiful words, and the latter is fresh and descriptive. Of those in the "Part-song" style, No. 5, "The Gentiles shall come," (S. Reay) is a not very good specimen, whilst No. 20, "We wait for Thy loving kindness," (G. A. Macfarren) shows how such a style may be ably handled. Some very good compositions do not fall readily under any of the three groups above noticed, such for example as No. 28 "The love of God is shed abroad," (S. Reay), No. 19, "The Lord hath been mindful of us," (G. A. Macfarren) and No. 18, "Rejoice in the Lord," (J. Baptiste Calkin). The last will make an easy and most useful anthem. On the whole, the collection will be found of great general value, the very small price at which each Introit is issued separately, bringing it within the common reach. It should not be a matter of regret that they are in so many different styles—quite the contrary. There probably never will be a definite criterion as to what is legitimate church music and what is not; all credit is therefore due to the editor, who has here provided for all shades of musical opinion.

Unison Service in F. By Berthold Tours.

Our heartiest greetings to another Unison Service Good work always claims welcome, but this good work claims special welcome. Long has languished that true vehicle of the Canticles in small "places were they sing" that was inaugurated by Mr. Goss some twenty-five years ago, and simply and solely from want of supply in the style. A distinct and separate system of musical expression this—with its broad vocal melody coloured and enforced by varying accompaniment of quicker movement—that if once it obtain footing in a church as vehicle of the Canticles must thrust out the expressionless see-saw chant, tolerable with the Psalter only because necessary in some shape or other—intolerable with the Canticles because unnecessary. Hitherto there has been a disinclination to adopt a system that fewness of examples prevented satisfactorily carrying out. In future, no church will be prevented from beginning with unison services because enough do not exist to go on with. Though we trust many another will soon be given us by our leading composers, enough now have we in "Novello's Octavo" to form a "Unison Service Book" for Fast use in cathedrals and larger churches, and for general use in our lesser churches. We have Macfarren in G, Monk in A, Barnby in D (morning) and C (evening), Goss in A; and for festival use in small churches that model of classical unison, Mr. Goss's Benedictus in A, with his really great Cantate and Deus Misereatur in C; and to complete "the Unison Service Book," we now have Tours in F. And truly a most fitting completion does our new acquisition form, for it reads as though it had purposely summed up in itself the characteristic excellencies of its excellent predecessor. In places are we reminded of Mr. Goss, his breadth, his careful and reverential weighing and skilful bringing out of the holy words,—yet his constant thought of his voices, their powers, their weaknesses, and their needs: we see the like thoughtful devices of notation to secure as far as possible clear articulate, intelligent utterance. Then Mr. Macfarren's tunefulness comes to thought, set withal in the refined nineteenth-century musical cosmopolitanism of Mr. Barnby, steadied, however, by the thoroughness of Dr. Monk; and yet these suggested comparisons arise from no plagiarism; in fact, originality is a feature of Tours in F. Rather may we not rejoice in these musical coincidences, so to call them, as proof that agreement is arrived at among our leading musical minds, as to the chief characteristics of the accompanied unison that surely must take its place as the universally accepted vehicle of the Canticles in our smaller churches. We say must, for happily the true office of music in the church is beginning to be understood to be not to tickle the ear with pretty tunes, not to exercise voices wholly unused during six days of the week, but to give meaning, vividness, reality, life to holy thoughts and sacred words. And as the right recognition of the office of church music spreads, so must spread the use of such services as Tours in F and its most worthy fellows.

Andrew Nimmo.

St. Leger's Reminiscences of Balfe.

If even in the title of this little book we see a very evident desire to give prominence to the name of St. Leger, the still greater wish to do the utmost to place the character of his late friend Balfe in its true light before the world, is also so obviously shown, that the little egotism of his biographer may be easily forgiven. The love for Balfe's music arose at a time when the masses were but little acquainted with the best lyrical works, and has gradually diminished as the knowledge of them increased. Unquestionably he was a man of brilliant musical talents, and had the rare gift of melody; but he wrote, as he lived, with a hearty and genuine love of the success of the hour, and perfectly content to receive that worldly homage so fatal to the healthy progress of a real artist. "Talk not to me of posthumous fame," said a well known actor; "give me a round of applause from the gallery;" and so thoroughly did our popular English composer adhere to this maxim, that we much doubt whether he sought after, or even valued, that place in the estimation of succeeding generations which Mr. St. Leger almost assumes that he is certain to retain. Apart from the question of Mr. Balfe's true position, however, this book of pleasant gossip is exceedingly interesting. The author has collected a large number of anecdotes, several of which will raise a hearty laugh, and all of which are at least amusing. It is true that, with the minuteness of a musical Boswell, little incidents are related which few persons care to read, save of the truly great men of the world—such, for instance, as that he composed the Opera of "Falstaff" at No. 61, Conduit Street, Regent Street, and that he was in the habit of kissing the scores of his works—but many of the "reminiscences" so thoroughly reveal the character of the man that, in addition to the pleasure they afford, we cannot but welcome them as offering convincing proofs of the impossibility of an artist with (as Mr. St. Leger says) "that native lightness of heart," and want of "firmness of character," working with any real steadiness and earnestness of purpose. Of his amiability, and desire to help forward any one in his profession, there can be little doubt: "St. Leger," he said, "always say a kind and pleasant thing of a friend, and when you cannot conscientiously, then don't say anything." Many long sermons we have listened to have not inculcated so pure a Christian doctrine as these few words express.

We have already said that Mr. St. Leger takes many opportunities of telling his readers about himself, as well as about Mr. Balfe. He informs us, for example, that in the year 1827, he "was residing at Granville Lodge, near Leicester," and that wishing to hear Madame Sontag sing the part of Rosina, in "The Barber of Seville," he "put a few things in a small portmanteau, and, hiding it under a large cloak," came up to London by the mail coach, and "arrived in London two hours before the Opera commenced." As all this has nothing whatever to do with Mr. Balfe—his name not even being mentioned—we think that some intimation that such little digressions might be expected in the book should have been given in the title-page. We are also told that when the composer played and sang the two songs, "They tell me thou'rt the favoured guest," and the "Power of Love," for the first time, Mr. St. Leger could not hear them without shedding tears. As an instance, too, of the off-hand and ultra-familiar manner in which most of the anecdotes are related, we may cite the account of the dinner at the "Star and Garter," at Richmond, after Balfe's visit to the Duke of Devonshire, where he says, "we maintained the elevation of our peckers by drinking several bumpers of champagne to the health of the liberal and amiable Duke." In a second edition of these "Reminiscences," which we see already announced, it is possible that the author may reconsider some of those portions we have commented upon; as it stands, however, it is a readable book, and will no doubt command an extensive circulation.

Deux Mazurkas. Pour Piano, par Berthold Tours.

It is perhaps a pardonable fault that these two excellently written Mazurkas remind us too much of Chopin. There is such grace and elegance about them, however, and they are so evidently the composition of a refined musical mind that they have a right to hold a place on their own merits; and we cordially recommend them to pianists who possess a sufficiently trained touch to expound their beauties.

Duff and Stewart.

Classical Treasures. Transcribed for the Pianoforte, by J. Theodore Trekell.

The title of these arrangements at once led us to expect that we might have something before us which could be conscientiously recommended both to masters and pupils. We have hitherto known Mr. Trekell exclusively as a writer of light, "drawing-room" pieces; but he has here proved not only that he has a classical taste himself, but that he is desirous of communicating that taste to others. There are four numbers of the series—No 1, containing the Kyrie from Haydn's First Mass; No. 2, Mozart's "Laudate Dominum;" No. 3, "In native worth," ("Creation") and No. 4, Mozart's "Et incarnatus est"—all of which are very carefully transcribed, and so arranged as to be perfectly within the grasp of young players. Nos. 1 and 2 form excellent sacred compositions for performance on Sunday evenings—in our opinion infinitely better than the original pieces and garbled extracts from standard works so often put forth for the "Sabbath." There are many secular treasures yet to be set before pianoforte pupils in the same shape; and we trust that Mr. Trekell's intention is to follow up what he has so satisfactorily commenced.

Triumphal March, for the Pianoforte. Composed by T. M. Mudie.

If so really an excellent March as this should not become widely known, it can only be in consequence of the immense quantity of pieces issued with a similar exterior within the last few months. Beyond the title-page, however, this resemblance ends, for this is no composition of patch-work passages which have been the common property of March-makers for years, but a good, solid piece of music which cannot fail to prove acceptable, both to performer and listener. The bold theme in B flat, with which it commences, is full of life; and the subject, in the sub-dominant, is extremely melodious, and contrasts well with the martial character of the opening and closing movement. Teachers will do well not only to secure this March for their pupils, but to look over some of the many other compositions of Mr. Mudie, any of which will do much towards cultivating both the touch and taste of young performers.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

Scattered Rose Leaves. Morceau Elegant, for the Pianoforte. By J. Theodore Trekell.

An elegant trifle, the character of which may be sufficiently imagined by the somewhat fantastic title which the composer has selected. If the demand for these light pieces is still maintained, it is well that musicians as good as Mr. Trekell should be engaged to supply them. With a brilliant finger and a graceful and sensitive touch, this composition may be made extremely effective.

A Brownie wooed a Fairy. Duet. The Verse by Frederick Enoch.

The Petrel's Warning. Song. The Verse by Frederick Enoch.

Composed by Henry Smart.

Mr. Smart's vocal pieces have always a character about them which amply proves that their composer invariably writes with a purpose; and this it is which removes even his simplest songs from the list of common-place effusions of those writers who can merely set a smooth melody to smooth words. "A Brownie wooed a Fairy," is an exceedingly effective duet. Each verse is commenced by a soprano, followed by a contralto, solo, and the voices are afterwards united; the change in the second verse being exceedingly beautiful, and in true sympathy with the poetry, which is admirably fitted for music. "The Petrel's Warning," is a more ambitious composition; and we need scarcely say that Mr. Smart's ambition is not likely to lead him astray. There is much dramatic feeling in the mysterious opening of the symphony, in G minor, and the whole of the vocal phrases, which are skilfully woven in with the accompaniment, describe the verses with remarkable fidelity, the major key, at the words "The mother looks out," breaking forth like a ray of sunshine over the gloomy sea. A good vocalist and a good accompanist will be necessary to give the true expression to this song; but whenever this union can be effected, there can be little doubt of its success.

Me only. Song. Written by Manley Hopkins. Composed by Charles Edward Stephens.

This song is written on a model which must please all musicians, although perhaps it will scarcely appeal to those amateur vocalists who have been nurtured in the school of "Claribel." In every respect it is one of the most carefully finished vocal pieces we have seen for some time, both melody and harmony moving throughout in loving company. The phrase, "Hear this, ye winds," happily left unharmonised, is perfectly beautiful in its contrast with the preceding portion of the song; and the F sharp to the word "only" (harmonised with what used to be called a "German sixth") suspends the ear with excellent effect, in anticipation of the key-note harmony. Mr. Stephens deserves credit for working in a manner which, however it may agree with his notions of art, can scarcely perhaps be called a "paying" one.

C. Jefferys.

Three Studies for the Pianoforte. Composed by C. H. Hullett, Lieut. Royal Marine Artillery.

To find an amateur devoting his time to the composition of three pian forte studies, instead of throwing off waltzes and polkas, is so good a sign of musical progress that we are inclined to devote a few lines to the consideration of Lieut. Hullett's praiseworthy labours. No. 1, Tarantelle, is freely written, but wants contrast, both of character and key. This dance is fatally easy to compose, for anything moving in brisk triplets in a minor key will serve the purpose. No. 2, "Fröhlichkeit," is much better, but too much resembles the first one. Had No. 3, "Elfentanz," been more developed, it would have ranked far above the others; but the composer seems to have been tired of his work, and anxious therefore to come to a conclusion, at the expense of its being somewhat abrupt. There is much musical feeling, however, shown in these little pieces, and the harmonies are generally well chosen and written with commendable care.

Beatrice. Morceau de Salon. Companion to "Alice." By Eugen Woycke.

We do not understand exactly what is meant by calling this piece a "Companion to Alice," nor indeed can the general public perhaps be expected to take much interest in the associates of this lady. As a graceful little trifle with the average quantity of arpeggios and scales, it may pass muster with amateurs who affect this kind of composition. The passages are elegantly written, and the theme used as the ground-work for the ornaments is sufficiently melodious.

Remember Love. Song. Written and composed by E. W. Buckingham.

This is a restless song, but by no means deficient in merit. The opening symphony is too long for a vocal piece of such small pretension. The composer has set the words at the commencement very successfully; but the short modulations give a fragmentary effect to the voice part scarcely in accordance with the simple nature of the poetry.

Original Correspondence.

THE VIOLIN AND ITS EMINENT PROFESSORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I have the honour to forward you copies of a recent correspondence which cannot fail to be interesting to all violinists, as well as to the numerous readers of your journal generally. If you will have the kindness to give the same a space in your valuable pages, additional information may be obtained through some of the numerous Professors who constantly peruse them.

Yours obediently,

"Preston, Lancashire, Jan. 28th, 1871.

"May it please your Royal Highness."

"Sir,—That, whereas, your late royal and princely father, of happy memory, was a wise and munificent patron of the arts and Belles Lettres, and united, moreover, to his many high accomplishments, a great love and taste for music, in the practice whereof he more particularly excelled as a dilettante performer on the violin: of which leading instrument, a foreign master, of great abilities as a player and composer, for the same—Benvenuto Campagnoli by name—has gracefully dedicated his unique "Method for the Violin," (Op. 21.) to your Royal Highness's late noble father. My curiosity, Sir, for more than thirty years, has been great to learn how the latter circumstance came about, that Campagnoli should thus dedicate his greatest work to an English nobleman And, secondly: Who was Campagnoli—so consummate an artist, and the composer of so elaborate a work? The violinist himself, indeed, tells us in the preface to the "Method"—in words as modest as brief—that he 'studied in the school of the celebrated Nardini.' The latter, who achieved an almost European reputation, was settled at Florence towards the close of last century, where, in his declining years, he opened a school for the study of the violin. Beyond this scant information in the few prefatory remarks in the work named, and a line in its title—"Member of the Royal Academy of Sweden," nothing whatever seems to be known, not even by musicians!

"Would your Royal Highness deign—if the thing be possible—to throw some more light on the subject?—either of your own personal knowledge, or through the instrumentality of the learned Professors, of whom your father was such a princely patron—a bright trait, doubtless, still inherited and remaining to your princely family.

"By so complying, your Royal Highness will enlighten myself and others who take an interest in the subject.

"I am, your Royal Highness's most dutiful and most humble servant,

"Sir,—I am directed by the Duke of Cambridge to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, and to inform you that His Royal Highness remembers very well as a boy, seeing Benvenuto Campagnoli constantly at Hanover, but beyond this he is unable to satisfy your curiosity. He was, he believes, a very fine musician, and had some daughters who played remarkably well.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—In reply to H. M. A., I beg to state that the late Lady Calleott, in her Scripture Herbal says:—"I have never been able to discover the author of the beautiful lines set to music by Handel, which I have chosen for my motto. They are not Dr. Watts's. But tradition assigns the poem of the "Solomon," as well as some other oratorios, to his friend, Dr. Morell."

Lady Calleott was assisted, I think, in her search by Rogers the poet, Mr. Hallam and others, but without success. Milton has the line, "And ev'ry herb that sips the dew."

Yours, &c.,

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

A Subscriber.—We cannot insert accounts of concerts furnished by anonymous correspondents.

J. B. Kearney.—The crotchet in the bar mentioned is divided into an irregular group of demisemiquavers, and the passage should be played independently of, and not measured with, the arpeggio in the left hand.

Thos. C. Lord.—The question should be addressed to a Theatrical, and not to a Musical, journal.

Musical Student.—Custom has sanctioned the placing of the sign at the end, as well as during the progress of a piece. Practically, however, of course, it can have no meaning.

F. J. M.—Only the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge.

William Vinning.—The cutting from the newspaper forwarded to us does not give us any information as to where or when the "Pianoforte Recital" took place.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Airdrie.—On Thursday, the 26th January, the members of the Airdrie Musical Association gave a performance of Handel's Messiah in the Public Hall with much success, the band and chorus numbering 80 performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Margaretta Smyth, Miss Lizzie Foster, Mr. Darling and Mr. D. Smyth, all of whom sang with much effect. Every credit is due to the conductor, Mr. Thomas Dixon, Organist of Garturk Church, for the very satisfactory manner in which the choruses were rendered. Miss Martha E. Fincher presided at the harmonium.

Andover.—Mr. Ellis Roberts, the eminent harpist, gave an entertainment on Friday, the 3rd ult., which was well patronised. Miss Ellen Glanville sang several songs in a pleasing style, and was encored in "Bid me discourse," and "The Minstrel Boy."——The second concert of the Andover Choral Society was given before a large and most appreciative audience. The programme contained a good selection, including five madrigals and several quartets, trios, &c., all of which were most effectively rendered. The principal vocalists were Miss Clarke, Mrs. W. Young, Miss Alice Barnes, Messrs. R. Footner, Cross, Burgiss, Brown, Greenhill, and Beare. The Society's conductor, Mr. Reuben Cross, deserves much praise for the excellent manner in which he has trained the choir.

Bath.—The fourth public rehearsal of Mr. Bianchi Taylor's choir was held at the Assembly Rooms, on the 7th ult. The whole of the choral music was exceedingly well rendered, the madrigal, "Flora gave me fairest flowers," Elliott's glee, "Come see what pleasure," "The Lass of Richmond Hill" (arranged by H. Leslie), and Pearsall's part-song, "Who shall win my Lady fair?" being amongst the most successful pieces. Several solos, glees and duets were also given with much effect, the singing of Miss Andrews, Miss Brettle, Messrs. Ashman and Estens eliciting much and deserved applause. The concert concluded with the National Anthem.

Birmingham.—The organ in S. Silas Church, Lozells, has been rebuilt by Messrs. Bevington & Sons, of London, and was re-opened by A. R. Gaul, Esq., Mus. Bac. Cantab. on Thursday, the 16th ult. We regret that we have not space to insert a specification of the instrument; but it is pronounced by competent judges to be in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.

Blackpool.—On Monday evening, the 13th ult., the Blackpool Vocal Society, numbering over 80 voices (under the leadership of Mr. N. Dumville, of Manchester), gave its first concert in the Assembly-room, to a large audience. Considering that the Society has only been in existence about six weeks, the progress made is surprising, and shows that great credit is due to the conductor. The first part of the programme consisted of selections from the Messiah. The principals were Miss M. Grindrod, Miss Webster, Miss Webbe, Mr. Dumville, Mr. Grime, and Mr. Stanton, with Messrs. Grindrod and Wrigley as accompanists on the pianoforte and harmonium. All the solos were well given, and the choruses were sung with remarkable steadiness and precision. The second part of the programme consisted of secular pieces. "God save the Queen" concluded the concert, which was a great success, and speaks well for the future of the Blackpool Vocal Society.

Brighton.—Mr. Kuhe's Festival concerts have proved thoroughly and deservedly successful. The programmes have been selected with the utmost care, invariably containing sufficiently popular pieces for a general audience, and sufficiently classical works for more artistic listeners. Several of the standard Symphonies have been played. On one of the evenings Rossini's Stabat Mater was given, and on Saturday afternoon Sir Michael Costa's Eli, the principal parts in the first-named work being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Elena Angeie, Mr. Nelson Varley, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, and in the second by Madame Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. A. Byrom, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. Amongst the instrumental performers must be mentioned Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who played Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in C minor so excellently as to receive the most enthusiastic applause, and to be unanimously recalled at the close. Mr. Kuhe's rendering of Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor was also an interesting feature at the eighth concert of the series; and solos have been played with brilliant success by Mr. H. Chipp (violoncello), Mr. Carrodus (violin), Mr. Radcliff (flute), and Mr. Maycock (clarionet). The attendance at each concert has been very large.

Brooklyn, New York.—A very excellent Organ Recital was given at Plymouth Church on the 14th January, by Mr. F. H. Torrington, organist of King's Chapel, Boston. The programme was well selected from the classical writers, and every piece was given with much effect. Mr. Torrington has lately been playing at the Music Hall, Boston, the music performed being always of the highest character.

Camborne.—A very successful concert was given in the Assembly Rooms, on Friday, the 27th January, by the recently established Camborne Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. Webster, organist of the parish church. The choruses, "Sing unto God," from Judas Maccabæus, and "The heavens are telling," from the Creation, were well given by the choir of 70 voices; and the duet from Judas, "O, lovely peace," sung by Mrs. Webster and Miss Baker, was much admired. The second part consisted of secular music, which was well selected and received with much favour. A feature in the evening was the violin performance of Master Willie Webster (aged six years), the son and pupil of the conductor, who played a Fantasia on a Welsh air, and elicited warm applause. Novello's Festival arrangement of "God save the Queen" concluded an excellent concert. Mr. Butler presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. W. Treleaven at the harmonium.

Cattistock.—The concerts held annually in this picturesque village took place on the 9th ult. at the commodious school-rooms, which have but recently been opened. The programme, both in the morning and evening, contained two overtures, which were excellently played by Mr. Loaring's band. A duet for pianoforte and violin, performed by Messrs. Loaring and Smith, was an interesting feature at the morning concert; and in the evening, in addition to a duet for the same instruments, played by the before-mentioned artists, a trio for pianoforte, flute and violin, in which Mr. Chaffin took the flute part, was very carefully rendered. The glees and trios, under the direction of the organist, Mr. J. Manley, were capitally sung. Mr. Hann was highly successful in his vocal solos, and the audience showed an appreciation of local talent by encoring the glee "Loreley."

Clifton.—Miss Home gave a Matinée at the Victoria Rooms, on Saturday, the 18th ult., before a large and fashionable audience. The beneficiare was highly successful in Haydn's "With verdure clad," and the romance and prayer from Otello; and the refinement which characterised her rendering of Lotti's aria "Pur dicesti," called forth an enthusiastic encore. Miss Home was well supported by Miss Grace in the harp accompaniment to Rossini's air, and by Mr. A. W. Waite in the obbligato accompaniment to "Pur dicesti," and Mozart's "Batti, batti." Herr Janeck performed with taste and effect some classical pieces on the pianoforte, and a Fantasia of his own on a Scotch air.

Chorley.—Mr. James Edelston's Tonic Sol-Fa Choir, of Preston, gave a concert in the Primitive Methodist School-room, on Monday evening, the 6th ult. The services of the choir were given gratuitously in aid of the school funds. The programme was varied and well selected, and the execution of the pieces reflected the utmost credit upon the teaching of Mr. Edelston. Master P. Edelston (eight years of age), performed a pianoforte solo, which was much applauded. Mr. Woolman presided at the harmonium and pianoforte, and played on the latter instrument Weber's Allegro from the Grand Sonata No. 1, with much taste and feeling. At the conclusion a vote of thanks to the choir was moved by Mr. J. Hindle, and seconded by Mr. S. Widdows (both of whom referred to the excellence of the tonic sol-fa system), and it was unanimously accorded.

Cork.—On the 13th ult. a concert in aid of the family of the late Mr. Creag was given at the Imperial Hotel, which we are glad to say was thoroughly successful. The first part was devoted to sacred music, and included the Recitative "And God created man," and air, "In native worth," from the Creation (excellently given by Mr. W. H. Tilla) a Recitative and Air from The Prodigal Son (well sung by Mr. J. Sullivan,) and the bass solo, "Veni Sancta Spiritus" (with flute obbligato), in which Mr. E. O'Mahony displayed an effective and well-trained voice, and was accompanied with much taste by Mr. J. P. Smyth. The solo in "The Marvellous Work" gave Miss Sheehan a good opportunity of showing her power of interpreting sacred music. We must also mention that Mendelssohn's "Sleepers wake!" and Mozart's Kyrie and Gloria, from the Twelfth Mass, were carefully rendered by the choir. The second part was miscellaneous. The concert, which was ably conducted by Mr. J. W. M'Carty, concluded with the chorus "Let Erin remember," arranged by Balfe.

Ealing.—On Wednesday evening, the 8th ult., the members of the Ealing Glee Club gave a concert in the Grove School-room, on behalf of the soup-kitchen of St. Mary's, Christ Church, and St. John's. The programme was excellently selected, and appeared to give unqualified pleasure to the audience. Several vocal solos were sung with decided success; and much praise must be awarded to the members of the choir for their careful rendering of "The Chafers," and Mendelssohn's "Vintage Song," from the unfinished opera Loreley. Liszt's Fantasia on "Rigoletto" was brilliantly performed on the pianoforte by Mrs Anderson (Miss Cecilia Sammerhayes), and a trio on airs from Mozart's operas was played by three young ladies with so much precision and true musical feeling as to elicit loud and prolonged applause. The concert was ably conducted by Mr. Hendewerk.——A special service to commemorate the re-opening of the organ at St. Mary's Church, took place on Thursday, the 9th ult. The varied powers of the instrument were most successfully tested by Dr. Chipp, who performed a well chosen selection from the works of the classical writers, including Handel's "Occasional Overture," the slow movement from Mendelssohn's "Italian Symphony," a Fugue, by Bach, and the first movement of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata." The psalms and canticles were sung to Gregorian tones; and the service was most efficiently rendered by the choir, which was augmented for the occasion.

Edinburgh.—On the 11th ult. a concert was given in the Music Hall by Mr. Hallé's orchestra, before a large and most appreciative audience. The orchestral works were of the highest character, and included Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Mendelssohn's Hebrides Overture, Wagner's to Tannhauser and Beethoven's comparatively unfamiliar overture, Weike des Hauses, all of which were excellently played. A feature in the concert was Mr. Charles Hallé's very fine performance of Schumann's Concerto in A minor, every movement of which was listened to with deep attention, the applause at the conclusion showing that whilst critics are debating upon the merit of this composer, audiences are rapidly settling the matter for themselves. Herr Stockhausen gave a thoroughly artistic rendering of a song from Boieldieu's Jean de Paris, and two of Schumann's lieder, and also created a genuine effect in Schubert's "Greisengesang," the original pianoforte accompaniment being scored for the orchestra by Brahms. The other vocalist was Miss Eleanor Armstrong, who was highly successful in Mozart's "Batti, batti," the violoncello obbligato being played by M. Vieuxtemps, a brother of the well-known violinist.——The Reid Concert took place on the 13th ult., and, thanks to the exertions of the Professor, who now worthily occupies the music chair, was in every respect one of the finest ever given in this city. According to annual custom, some compositions by General Reid, the founder of the Music Chair, were given and listened to with becoming reverence. The programme comprised Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, two orchestral pieces by Berlioz, and the overtures Olympia (Spontini), Leonora (Beethoven), and Jubilee (Weber), to every one of which it is needless to say the fine orchestra rendered ample justice. The instrumental solos were Mendelssohn's "Serenade" and "Allegro giojoso," a Gavotte by Bach, and a Novelette by Schumann (played with his usual effect by Mr. Charles Hallé), and an Air Varié by Vieuxtemps, so magnificently performed on the violin by Madame Norman-Neruda as to elicit the most enthusiastic applause and a double recall. Herr Stockhausen gave the fine recitative "Tyrannic love," and air "Ye verdant plains," from Handel's Oratorio Susanna, in masterly style, and was equally effective in a Scena from Euryanthe. Miss Armstrong sang with much success a highly dramatic Romance, by Professor Oakeley, called "La fiancée du marin," and also gave an artistic rendering of "Non mi dir," from Don Giovanni. Before concluding our notice, we may say that all the minor arrangements connected with the concert—including the decoration of the room with hot-house plants and busts of musicians—were perfect.

Faringdon, Berks.—On the afternoon of Thursday, the 16th ult., Sir Fred. A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford, gave a Lecture on Madrigals, in the Corn Exchange, the illustrations, consisting of selections from the best specimens, being rendered by some members of the Vale of White Horse Church Choral Society, in connection with which the lecture was delivered. The lecturer was introduced by the Rev. Jos. Moore, Rural Dean and Vicar of Buckland, a member of the committee. The Rev. E. Penwarne-Wellings, Vicar of Stanford, conducted, and the Rev. Henry Joyner, the hon. sec. of the Society, was stationed at the harmonium to give the key-notes, &c. The singers, to the number of about thirty, made up of the elite of the Faringdon Church Choir, with the musical portion of the neighbouring clergy and their families, took up their position upon a raised platform at one end of the spacious room. The lecture consisted of a lucid and well-arranged exposition of the origin, history and development of the madrigal, especially in England. Its influence upon even church music was distinctly traced. The etymology and derivation of the name "madrigal" were dwelt upon, five theories upon this point being given. It was stated as a difficult task to precisely define its origin and scope of meaning. The lecture was listened to with much interest by an appreciative though small audience. Before concluding, Sir Frederick thanked the singers for their very efficient help. It was not often, he said, that he had the good fortune to be assisted so well. He had given the lecture several times, but rarely had the music been performed so satisfactorily in every respect as on the present occasion. He also begged to thank his friend, Mr. Wellings, and also Mr. Joyner, for both must have taken excessive pains with the practices and general preparations for the lecture. As the choir is a purely amateur one, these compliments from so high an authority gave great pleasure and satisfaction.

Forton, Gosport.—The 4th ult. was an important day at the church of St. John the Evangelist, the occasion being the re-opening of that church after very extensive alterations, and the opening of a new organ. The sermon was preached by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Winchester. The organ is a very handsome, powerful, and sweet-toned instrument, built by Messrs. Flight and Son, St. Martin's Lane, London, and its capabilities were effectively displayed by the organist of the church, Mr. Knight. The choir was assisted by members of the neighbouring choirs. Anglican chants have now superseded Gregorian, and the large congregation joined heartily in the singing. The church is one of the most comfortable in the county, and the choir (surpliced) bids fair to be a most effective one.

Guildford.—The first concert of the Guildford Choral Society was given on Thursday evening, the 16th ult., in the Western Hall, which was filled in every part. The choir, numbering about eighty voices, was very evenly balanced. The programme commenced with Leslie's four-part song, "The Pilgrims," and the remainder of the first part was devoted to Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and "Come let us sing" (95th Psalm), Mr. Childerstone also giving with much effect the tenor solo, "Then shall the righteous." In the first-named work, Mrs. H. Jeffries sang the solos with good expression, and the other principal parts were well sustained by Mr. Otway Mayne and Miss Andrews. The second part was miscellaneous, and included several part songs and solos, all of which were received with much favour. Miss Nye accompanied on the pianoforte with much care and judgment, and Mr. Andrews was, as usual, an able conductor.

Harrow.—An amateur concert was given in the Speech-Room, on the 26th January, in aid of the funds of the Harrow Rifle Corps. The solo singers were Miss Huntingford and the Rev. Robinson Duckworth. The Harrow Choral Society contributed many part songs, and two solos on the pianoforte were given by Miss Florence May. The attendance was very large, and the sum of £70 was realised. Mr. John Farmer conducted.

Hastings.—The Music Hall was crowded to excess by a fashionable audience on Monday evening, the 20th ult., when a performance of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, Elijah, with full orchestral accompaniment, was given by the St. Paul's Choral Union, an association which has not been long in existence, but which has the prospect of a lengthened and successful career. The orchestra was selected from the principal London and Provincial Concerts, and with the chorus, numbered upwards of 100 performers. The vocalists comprised 26 sopranos, 18 altos, 12 tenors and 12 basses. The principal vocalists were:—Soprano, Miss Jessie Royd; contralto, Miss Adelaide Newton; tenors, Mr. Robson and Mr. James, and bass, Mr. Lansmere. The performance, on the whole, may be spoken of in terms of high commendation. The choruses were well sustained, and were characterised by a remarkable degree of precision. Among the instrumentalists were Signor Zerbini, violin (principal); Mr, Pettit, violoncello (principal); Mr. H. Leslie, pianoforte, and Mr. G. C. Martin, Mus. Bac., Oxon, harmonium. The conductorship devolved upon Mr. John Abram, Mus. Bac., organist of St. Paul's Church, who accomplished his arduous task with the utmost success.

Huddersfield.—On Friday, the 17th ult., a concert was given by the members of the Huddersfield Choral Society, in the Assembly Rooms, Queen Street, for the benefit of Mr. Joshua Sykes, the oldest member of the Society. The first part consisted of selections from Judas Maccabæus, and Samson, the principal vocalists being Miss Dransfield, Miss Moseley, Mrs. Hirst, Mrs. Lunn, Mrs. Barras, and Mr. Garner. Miss Moseley and Miss Dransfield were much applauded in the duet, "O lovely peace"; "Return O God of Hosts," by Miss Moseley, and "Let the bright Seraphim," by Miss Dransfield, were enthusiastically received, and Mr. Garner was encored in "Honour and Arms." The second part consisted of songs, part-songs, glees, and duets, all of which were well sung, several being re-demanded.——On Monday, the 20th ult., a concert took place in aid of the organ fund, St. Andrew's Church, in the Assembly Rooms, Queen Street. Artists, Miss A. Dransfield, Miss Moseley, Mr. Joel Mellor, Mr. Varley, and Mr. R. Garner. The programme consisted of quartets, duets, and songs, which were given in excellent style, Miss Dransfield and Mr. Garner receiving an encore in the duet "The Syren and Friar." Mr. Varley and Mr Mellor contributed some effective songs, which were much applauded. Mr. J. Wood accompanied on the pianoforte.

Leamington.—Mr. Francis Howell's concert, which was given on the 9th ult., before a large audience, introduced his Oratorio Captivity for the first time here; and we are glad to record that it was thoroughly successful. The local papers speak in the highest terms of the music in this work, and we have no doubt that it will shortly make its way to the metropolis. The principal vocalists were Madame Laura Baxter, Mrs. Unett, Miss Ley, Miss Bickmore, Mr. J. Barnett and Mr. Bernard Farebrother, all of whom were most efficient in the solo music allotted to them. There was a good band, led by Mr. Heden. The Rev. M. E. Browne presided at the organ, and Mrs. Henry Dale at the pianoforte. The second part was miscellaneous.

Liverpool.—The second subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 7th ult. To the more musical portion of the audience it was highly interesting, the orchestral novelty of the evening being Schubert's delicate and poetical, but unfortunately, unfinished Sinfonia, No. 8, in B minor. The overtures were Cherubini's to Les deux Journées, Weber's to Oberon, and Auber's to Les Diamants de la Couronne, which latter closed the concert. The vocal artists were Madlle. Sophie Loewe and Herr Nordblom; solo violin, Signor Sivori, who was warmly received after his long absence; and who amply proved that his performance had lost none of its former charm. His solos were Mendelssohn's Concerto in E minor, and an Andante and Rondo Pastorale, by Pietro Nardini (1760). In reply to an encore of this, he gave an excellent version of a song by Bellini. Madlle. Loewe and Herr Nordblom possess sweet and pure voices, without however much power; but the musicianlike style of Herr Nordblom, and the unforced simplicity of Madlle. Loewe produced a very favourable impression. The choral members sang with good effects of light and shade several pieces of an agreeable character.——The third of a series on the plan of the London "Monday Popular Concerts," took place in the Philharmonic Hall, on Wednesday, the 11th ult. Executants, Herren Joachim and J. Ries, Mr. Zerbini, Herr Daubert (in place of Signor Piatti, prevented by illness from fulfilling his engagement). Mr. Reynolds, contra basso; solo pianoforte, Madame Schumann; vocalist, Miss Enriquez; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The programme included Onslow's stringed quintet in A minor, op. 34; Schumann's "Carnaval Scenes Migonnnes," solo pianoforte; Schumann's stringed quartet in A minor, No. 1, op. 41. Beethoven's Romance in G major, No. 1, op. 40, solo violin, with pianoforte accompaniment, and Schubert's quintet in A major, op. 114, for pianoforte, violin, viola, violoncello and contra basso. Such an excellent programme interpreted by such artists could not fail to be, as it proved, an exquisite enjoyment to a large and appreciative audience.——The Third Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 21st ult., the great feature being a fine rendering of Spohr's sinfonia, "The Power of Sound," and the excellent contra-basso performances of Signor Bottesini. Two charming morceaux from his new opera of Ali Baba, were also interesting, both as novelties and as being Signor Bottesini's composition. The vocal artists were Madame Colombo, Madame Calisto, and Signor Piccioli, all new to a Liverpool audience. Madame Colombo possesses a lovely voice and much refinement of execution. Madame Calisto, with a sweet, though rather thin tone, interprets her music with much energy, and Signor Piccioli sings with great passion and feeling. The Choral members of the Society sang very well a chorus from Euryanthe, and one of Purcell's, from Dido and Æneas; the only fault of which was its shortness. The overtures were Weber's Ruler of the Spirits, and Mozart's Figaro, and the concert closed with a spirited performance of that to Auber's La Sirene.

Lymington.—On Tuesday, the 18th ult., the members of the Philharmonic Society gave their second concert of the season at the Assembly Rooms, and in accordance with the generally expressed wish, repeated the first part of their former programme, Locke's Macbeth music, which was given with great energy and precision. The choruses were admirably sustained, the echo chorus, "Nimbly, nimbly," "We fly by night," and the concluding chorus, "Around, around," being especially successful. Mrs. John Lane Shrubb sang the soprano music in a highly satisfactory manner, and Mr. Cross (of Winchester Cathedral) gave the bass part with much care and finish. The second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection, several vocal solos being admirably given, and much applauded. The band played the overtures allotted to them with good effect. The choir showed much improvement since the last concert, the attention to light and shade being more marked. Mr. Charles Fletcher of Southampton led the band. We must not forget a word of praise to the conductor, Mr. R. Augustus Klitz, for the energy displayed in keeping such a large body of performers so well together.

Malvern.—On Monday, the 20th ult., Mr. Holt, organist of Newland Church, gave an evening concert at the Lecture Hall, in connection with the Malvern Link Working Mens' Institute. Miss Spicer and Miss Lane sang several ballads in a pleasing manner, and with very good expression, and Mr. Stevens and Mr. Tuson were also highly successful in their solos. Mr. Holt presided at the pianoforte. On Tuesday evening another miscellaneous concert was given at the North Malvern National School Room, in aid of the funds of the North Malvern Institute. Miss Spicer, Miss Plant, Mrs. Dobbs, Mr. C. Dalley, Mr. Lockyer, Mr. J. Vaughan, Miss Hobro, Master Wadeley, Mr. W. Woodyatt, Mr. C. Pullen and Mr. Bridgewater took part in the performances, which on the whole passed off with success. Mr. Holt and Mr. W. Higley presided at the pianoforte during the evening.

Manchester.—The second concert of the season given by the Athenæum Musical Society, on the 3rd ult., was noteworthy as introducing Mr. Joseph Barnby's sacred Idyll, Rebekah, to a Manchester audience. The solo portions were effectively given by Miss Isabella Higham, Mr. Davison, and Mr. Shorrock. Unfortunately the orchestral parts were not forthcoming, but the accompaniments were skilfully played on the pianoforte by Dr. Hiles. The choruses were sung with much care and precision, and the work was thoroughly successful. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, and contained selections from Handel's L'Allegro, Il Pensieroso, and Il Moderato.

Midhurst.—Mr. T. H. Saunders, organist and director of the choir of the parish church, gave his Fifth Annual Concert on Monday, the 6th ult. The artists engaged were Miss Jessie Royd, Miss Kate Harris, Mr. W. H. Bishop, Mr. Geo. Allen, and Mr. Frank Thornton; Violin, Mr. W. M. Quirke; Pianoforte, Mr. Jas. Kilner. The programme, which was a lengthy one, gave the greatest satisfaction to a very numerous audience; Miss Royd and Mr. Thornton particularly distinguishing themselves. Mr. T. H. Saunders conducted.

New York.—The second concert of the Philharmonic Society was given at the Academy of Music, on Saturday evening, the 14th January. Rubinstein's Symphony, entitled Ocean (played by the Society for the first time), and Cherubini's overture to Anacreon were the principal orchestral pieces, and both were received with much favour. Mr. Richard Hoffman's performance of the Barcarole from Sterndale Bennett's fourth pianoforte Concerto, and the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto in C minor, displayed his powers to the utmost advantage, and he was warmly and most deservedly applauded.

Rochdale.—The Messiah was performed in the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Smith Street, on Thursday evening, the 26th January. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland (soprano), Mrs. Clegg (contralto, in place of Miss Booth, of Oldham, who was unable to be present owing to an affection of the throat), Mr. Allen (tenor), and Mr. Lancashire (bass). The band and chorus numbered upwards of sixty performers, Mr. Lofthouse being leader of the orchestra, and Mr. John Harst officiating as conductor. Miss Clelland, in all her solos, acquitted herself creditably. Mrs. Clegg rendered the airs, "He shall feed His flock," and "He was despised," with much effect, and Mr. Allen and Mr Lancashire were also thoroughly efficient in the tenor and bass solos. The singing of the choruses was worthy of especial praise. There was a very good attendance.

South Norwood.—The third concert of the Musical Society took place on Monday, the 6th ult., when Weber's Mass in G, and a miscellaneous selection were given. Miss K. Poyntz, Miss Laura Manvell, Mr. Stedman and Mr. Fell sang the solos with much effect; and in every respect the performance was thoroughly satisfactory. Of the pieces in the second part, Miss Poyntz's "That's the way for Willie," and Mr. Stedman's "We may be happy yet" (both encored), deserve especial commendation. Mr. W. J. Westbrook conducted.

St. Austell.—The members of the St. Austell Choral Society gave an excellent concert on the evening of Tuesday, the 7th ult. The programme included part songs and choruses, by Mendelssohn, Bishop, Pinsuti, Verdi, Sullivan, and Calkin, which were very carefully rendered. The glees, "Foresters sound," and "Smile O Heaven," for male voices, were both encored. Miss Samwells gave a German song, the conductor playing a charming violin obbligato, and though early in the programme it was redemanded. Several other solos were also given with much success by Miss Higman, Mr. Holt, Mr. Tyacke, Mrs. Ball, and Mrs. Perkins. The concert must have been highly satisfactory, not only to the audience but to the choral society. Mr. E. Trembath presided at the piano, and Mr. H. Trembath, Mus. Bac., conducted.

St. Ives.—The second concert of the Philharmonic Society was given in the Corn Exchange on the 9th ult., under the able conductorship of Mr. A. D. Holloway. The programme consisted of Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, "As the hart pants," and a miscellaneous selection. Miss Blanche Reeves sang the soprano solos in the Psalm with much effect, and was warmly received The choruses were given with precision and vigour. In the second part several solos were well rendered by Miss Reeves, Miss Cole, Messrs. Jennings, W. Stevens, J. Ding, Jay, and Frank Cooper. Mrs. Holloway was thoroughly successful in the pianoforte piece, "La Cascade," and Mr. S. Meadows in a solo on the cornet.

Tamworth.—On Thursday, the 9th ult., the fine old parish church in this town was re-opened after partial restoration. The services (which were very efficiently rendered by the choir of the church) were choral, Tallis's Responses being used. The "Te Deum" and "Jubilate" were by Attwood, and the "Cantate" and "Deus misereatur" by Bayley. The anthems were "And the glory of the Lord" and "Hallelujah," from the Messiah. Mr. J. S. Creswell, organist of the church, presided at the organ.

Truro.—The Truro Choral Society gave an evening concert in the Concert Hall, on the 21st ult., to a large and fashionable audience. The first part of the programme consisted entirely of the compositions of Sir Henry Bishop, which were admirably rendered. The second part was devoted to Mr. Lahee's cantata "The Building of the Ship," the solos being taken by members of the society. Mr. Quicke led the band. Mr. Baker presided at the organ (in the sudden and unavoidable absence o Mrs. Carter), and Mr. Trembath, Mus. Bac., conducted.

Wandsworth.—Miss Marian E. Bruce gave an evening concert on Monday, the 30th January, at the Assembly Rooms. Miss Bruce's cultivated powers as a pianist were effectively displayed in a "Trio concertante" in G (op. 35), for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello (Hummel), in conjunction with Messrs. Weiss and J. Griffiths; the "Sonata Favorita" in F, for pianoforte and horn (Beethoven), with Mr. Ford; a grand duet for two pianofortes (Huguenots), with Herr Wilhelm Ganz; and the duet, Overture to "Ruy Blas" in C minor, op. 95 (Mendelssohn), with Mr. Edmund West. She also performed, with much success, Benedict's Fantasia on "Where the bee sucks." Mr. Weiss played a violin solo "Air varié" (De Bériot), with much skill and good effect. The principal vocalists were Miss Robertine Henderson, Miss Edith Blair, Mr. Montem Smith, and Mr. Soper, all of whom were highly successful. Herr Wilhelm Ganz and Mr. Edmund West (organist of the Wesleyan Chapel, Wandsworth) were the conductors. The concert was well attended.——A concert, in aid of the New Wandsworth Philanthropic Society, was given at the Assembly Rooms, High Street, on Monday evening, the 20th ult. The artists were Madame Kerm, Miss Edith Blair, Miss R. Houghton, Mr. Montem Smith, Mr. J. H. Croft, Masters Coward and Wood (from the Chapel Royal, St. James's), and the London Orpheus Quartett. The band of the Victoria Rifles (by permission of his Grace the Duke of Wellington) also lent its aid. Many of the pieces elicited considerable applause, amongst which may be mentioned Mr. Montem Smith's songs, "The Violet" and "Never mind the rest" (both encored); duet, by Miss Blair and Mr. Croft, "Dimmi che m'ami" (encored); and duet, by the Masters Coward and Wood. "Ye banks and braes," most delicately sung and encored. No less than three out of the four sung by the London Orpheus Quartett were re-demanded, and one, "Evening's twilight," was loudly called for a third time. The band of the Victoria Rifles performed with great spirit, under the direction of Mr. Sibold, bandmaster.

Warrington.—An excellent concert was given by the Warrington Musical Society, on the 15th ult., before a large audience. The part-songs and choruses were sung with a decision and effect which reflected the highest credit upon the members of the Society; Miss Macirone's "Sir Knight," Sullivan's "Oh, hush thee, my babie," and Gade's chorus, "Spring's message," being amongst the most successful of the choral pieces. The principal vocalists were Madlle. Sinico, Madlle. Rosa Kannenberg, Signori Vizzani, Foli and Ciampi, all of whom, it is needless to say, were received with the utmost favour, Madlle. Sinico in "Roberto, o tu che adoro" and "Qui la voce" creating a most enthusiastic demonstration. Dr. Hiles conducted the choral music, Signor Bevignani was the accompanist, and Mr. T. M. Pattison presided at the organ.

Whitehaven.—At the "Refuge School Soirée," on Tuesday, the 7th ult., Mr. Hamilton White's vocal class sang a choice selection of part-songs, glees, &c., in a highly creditable manner. Much care had evidently been taken in training the voices, and the result was a commendable attention to the various shades of expression. The "Qui tollis," "Kyrie," and "Gloria," from the 12th Mass (Mozart), "O hush thee my babie" (Sullivan), "The Fisherman's good night" (Bishop), and "Around the Maypole tripping" (Hatton), were particularly worthy of notice.

Windsor.—One of the most successful concerts of the season was given by the Windsor and Eton Amateur Madrigal Society, on the 31st January, in St. Mark's School, in aid of the renovation of the parish church. Additional éclat was given to the event by the proceedings being graced with the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Christian. An excellent programme was provided, the vocal parts of which consisted almost entirely of madrigals and part-songs. The former were selected for the most part from the compositions of the seventeenth century, the authors being Benet, Weelkes, Wilbye, Edwardes, and Pearsall. The latter comprised selections from Mendelssohn, Arne, Jackson, Kücken, Elvey, Pinsuti, and Macfarren. The madrigals calling for special mention were Benet's "All creatures now are merry-minded," Wilbye's "Flora gave me fairest flowers," and Edwardes's "In going to my lonely bed." Among the part-songs the most noticeable were Mendelssohn's "A winter, surly winter," and Arne and Jackson's "Where the bee sucks;" but the gems of the evening were two Italian trios and choruses "L'Alpigiane" and "Le Spagnole," both by Pinsuti. These were most rapturously encored, and repeated. Mendelssohn's chorus, "The Vintage Song," for male voices only, was beautifully rendered, and narrowly escaped an encore. The vocal part was relieved by the performance of two solos on the violoncello by Mr. Aylward—Mendelssohn's "Romance sans paroles," and "Romance" by Golterman—both of which were excellently played. The only vocal solo given was by the Rev. W. H. Bliss—"Nazareth," by Gounod—who sang it by special request of their Royal Highnesses, and received enthusiastic applause. Mrs. Montresser, of Slough, accompanied on the piano, the Rev. W. H. Bliss on the harmonium, and Dr. Elvey conducted.

Woodford.—An excellent concert was given by Mr. F. W. Bates, at the Assembly Rooms, Castle Hotel, on the 7th ult. The principal instrumental pieces were the "Andante" and "Allegro Assai," from Mendelssohn's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello, and a duet for flute and pianoforte, in both of which Mr. Bates was the pianist, Herr Daubert playing the violoncello part in the first composition, and Mr. B. Wells the flute in the second. Miss Jessie Royd, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Farquharson were highly successful in all their solos, several of which were encored.

Wootton Bassett.—A very successful performance of Handel's Messiah was given in the British Schoolroom, before a crowded audience, on the 15th ult. The band and chorus numbered over fifty performers. The choruses were given with remarkable precision and energy. The solos for the soprano were sung by Miss Watts and Miss Hutchins; and those for contralto by Miss Jackson. The whole of the tenor part was sustained by Mr. Brinkworth, the bass being divided between Messrs. Blanchett and Barrett. There were several encores. Mr. W. Cross, the conductor, is to be congratulated upon having such excellent leaders of the band as J. R. Harris, Esq., of Bath, Mr. Joyce and Dr. Cooper. Mr. Brinkworth presided at the harmonium.

Worcester.—The members of the Worcester Musical Society gave their second open rehearsal, or members' night, at the Music Hall, on Friday, the 17th ult. The programme consisted of Benedict's Cantata, The Legend of St. Cecilia, (the first time of its performance in Worcester), and a miscellaneous selection. The principal parts of the Cantata were allotted to Mrs. A. Caldicott, Mrs. S. Walker, Messrs. Haywood, Gummery, H. Caldicott, and Carr, members of the Society, who acquitted themselves with much credit. The choruses were sung by the members of the choir with precision and good effect, giving undoubted evidence of their careful training. The second part consisted of glees, part-songs, &c., sung by members of the Society, and a clarionet solo (with piano accompaniment) by Mr. Whinfield. The concert was a decided success; and the performers received the hearty applause of a large audience, the Hall being filled to overflowing. Mr. Quarterman presided at the organ, and Mr. Caldicott, the hon. conductor, at the piano.

Yeovil.—Mr. Loaring gave a concert at the Town Hall, on Monday evening, the 6th ult., which proved highly successful. The proceeds were given to the funds of the Soup Kitchen. Beethoven's overture to Prometheus, and Rossini's Gazza Ladra, were performed by a band consisting of eighteen instrumentalists. Mr. and Mrs. Loaring played Beethoven's Symphony in C as a piano duet, and a Quartet of Spohr's was rendered with considerable taste by Messrs. Loaring, Walter, Custard, and Bennett. The vocalists were amateurs of the town.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. C. E. Kettle, to St. Nicholas (Old Parish Church), Plumstead, S.E.——Mr. Bernarde Tayler, Organist and Choirmaster, to S. John the Baptist, Pimlico.——Mr. Robert Nottingham, to St. Saviour's, Croyden.——Mr. C. Shuttleworth, Organist and Choirmaster, to St. James's Church, Woodside, Horsforth, Leeds.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. beg to announce that it is their intention to issue, in the octavo form, a series of Anthems by the greatest Modern Composers, principally selected from their extensive Catalogue, and also including new works of undoubted merit. The preference shown by the musical public for the small Scores over the separate vocal parts, has been so marked as to warrant the publishers in anticipating a more than usually large circulation for the Edition.

It is intended to issue these Anthems in Weekly Numbers, commencing with the New Year, at Twopence, Threepence, Fourpence or Sixpence each, according to their length.

Twenty-six Numbers will form a Volume, which will be published half-yearly.

Many of the best known and most favourite Anthems which have hitherto been only obtainable in the large and comparatively expensive Folio size, will thus be brought within the reach of all.

It is also intended to include in this series, Anthems by Ancient Composers, but these will always be issued in twenty-six consecutive numbers, so as to form a separate Volume.

The following Anthems are now in course of publication:—

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.

"... Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services."..... they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.

"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Foyle's Musical Journal.

HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY, having spent the last Ten Years in improving upon the ordinary Harmonium, has succeeded in bringing out an Instrument, nearly approaching the tone of the Organ; the harsh and reedy tone which has hitherto been so great an objection in other Harmoniums is entirely obviated, and although the Bass is deep, full, and round, yet the Treble is always predominant, and through the careful voicing of the reeds, the articulation is fully equal to that of the Piano.

Beautifully illustrated in Colours, with views of celebrated Cathedrals.

"These pieces, like those by Felix Gantier, reviewed some time ago in the Musical Times, are especially intended for young players, and will, we think, be found equally acceptable to teachers and pupils. They are written in the form of little Fantasias, each commencing with a short introduction. The illustrations, printed in colours, are exceedingly beautiful."—Musical Times, Feb., 1870.

THE MUSICAL TIMES,
And Singing Class Circular.

CHORAL MATTERS.

I have in three distinct publications, The Double Choir (Rivingtons), Cathedralia (Masters), and Sacred Archæology (Lovell Reeve), discussed many points of choral arrangement. In the following article I wish to draw attention to several points on which there is much popular misapprehension. I proceed to show:

First, that the office of Precentor can be held only by a priest, and exists only in cathedral and collegiate churches, and, before the reformation was also in existence in minsters.

Secondly, the meaning of ruling the choir.

Thirdly, the duty of rectors of choir.

Fourthly, the use of musical instruments in church, and the origin of the office of Organist.

I. The Precentor in cathedral churches, secular or minsters, was a dignitary and Priest by the Statutes and Canon Law. "Those constituted in a dignity office or ministry, as the Dean, Archdeacon, Archpriest, Provost, Præcentor, Treasurer, Chancellor, Master of the Scholars, and Sacrist." (Lyndwood, 327.) The Bishop of Salisbury in the College of Bishops is Præcentor, and when the Archbishop of Canterbury "solemnly celebrates in the presence of the Episcopal College, ought to rule the choir in the divine offices by ancient observance and custom."—Ib. 104. The Statutes of the old foundation state that "the Chanter ought to rule the choir as to singing, and can raise or lower the pitch;" at Exeter he "ruled the choir and boys," and had charge of their morals and instruction, their food and dress. At Hereford, in solemn processions, he commenced the first chant, and the sequence; at Mass and Vespers assigned their duties to the rulers of choir, assisted the Bishop in beginning the anthem and Gloria in Excelsis, and bore the whole charge of the chanting and psalmody; and was consulted in defining the amount of solemnity to be observed, and assigning the person and time for its discharge. At Salisbury he drew up the list of Chanters and Ministers of the Altar, ruled the choir on principal feasts, gave directions to the Rectors, and also the note to the Bishop. At Wells he had charge of the song school and the instruction of the boys, their discipline, admission, and arrangement in choir. At York he ruled the choir in singing and psalms on great festivals, began the "Office" (Introit) in the Mass, and inspected song-schools. At St. Paul's he appointed the Chanters, kept order in the choir, and led the antiphons, sequences and processional chants on great festivals, and examined candidates for admission into the choir. In all cases he superintended and tabled the singers, and in most churches appointed the clerks and boys.

Succentor.—The Succentorship was an office. (Lyndwood 144.) The Subchanter, also a priest, fulfilled the duties of the Chanter in his absence, and received his instructions from him. At York he pointed out the anthem to the Dean. At Hereford he was to attend perpetually the services and keep the choir books, ruled the choir and the Rectors, had the whole burden of the psalmody and singing, admitted or expelled the boys, and had power over the clerks. At York, in the name of the Præcentor he arranged the service and ruled the choir. He usually corrected the choristers. It was the duty of the Præcentor or Succentor to see that all in choir sang together, paused together, began anew together, neither outrunning nor lingering behind others, but singing distinctly, audibly, clearly, with care and devotion, dignity in gesture, obedience to command, and reverence in their ministry.

II. Ruling (i. e. directing or leading) the Choir.—The parish Priest presides in ruling the choir, in beginning anthems and responses, in reading lessons, in celebrating fixed ministrations of Holy Communion and other Divine offices at set times and seasons. He must see that the Divine office is rightly performed, so that the due order is observed, that the hours are not said after the time, and that there be no clipping in saying or singing of words or syllables. The whole direction of the choir in singing and psalmody resides in his person. (Lyndw., 71.) The choir was ruled on Sundays and great feasts, and during certain octaves. (MS. Harl, 1001, fo. 121 b.)

III. Rectors of Choir.—At York the Rector of Choir gave the tone or note before the Dean went up to the Sanctuary. At Exeter the Rulers marked "absences," and the Cardinals of the choir and two other Ministers "warded the choir," by noting all irregularities at St. Paul's. At Hereford they began the Introit at Mass and the Kyrie in the Mass, and if negligent and incorrigible were removed at the delation of the Succentor. These Rectors of Choir were Vicars, and at York were bound to know the hymns and all the chants, which they were to begin, and to intone the psalms in their proper mode. They were also called Cantors or Chanters.

There was a principal Rector who was directed as to the Introit by the Præcentor, and then announced it to his fellow. It would seem that in the time of Amalarius they were called Succentors. At Lichfield there were four on great feasts, who took their orders from the Præcentor. At Chichester "two of the Calabre amess" (that is Vicars wearing the amess of dark Calabrian fur) were the "high Rectors in all principal feasts. Two in the priest's stalls were high Rectors in all lesser feasts, and in others two of the second form were Rectors. Every Rector's course of the second form (or row of stalls) continued two weeks alternately."

The Præcentor had a staff when a dignitary, as at St. Paul's. We find a "staff of yverie for the Chauntre of the Queere, with a hedd and a crosse of beriall wrought with gold-smythe worke, with vij joynts, silver & gilt beside the picke and the crosse." (MS. Inv. Publ. Rec. Off.) The Rectors also had their staffs. Thus I find in an MS. inventory at Winchester College:

1582 Four Rectors of the choir's staffs tipped with gold and silver.

Item, three chairs with cushions of silk, and four leathern stools for the same.

And at St. Stephen's, Westminster:

ij Rector's staves of sylver parcell gylt xxiiii. ons. (MS. Inv.)

These Rectors of the choir may still be seen in churches of Normandy, laymen who wear copes and walk up and down the choir on either side during the singing of psalms, etc., and then return to high stools at the west end. These, in the main, respond to the English director or leader of the choir. In the Minster of Evesham the Præcentor, when ruling, stood in the centre of the choir.

IV. When a Bishop enters the church to celebrate, the organs are played, to enhance the magnificence of the solemn service, and so also at the entrance of the head of the Chapter on a similar occasion. Where there was no Organist a Canon might leave the Choir and fulfil his duties. Rules were laid down for the use of the Organ which was said to "sing" in the hymns, canticles and psalms, and the Organist is forbidden to prolong the service so as to weary the congregation and exhibit his skill by dwelling on the notes, and bound strictly to accompany the chant, and conclude playing when desired by the proper officer. The whole design in the introduction of music and instrumental harmony was to kindle the hearts of the faithful with spiritual joy and stimulate devotion by its varied melody, and yet it was far later than the time of St. Thomas Aquinas, who distinctly says that in his time it was unknown for fear of a misapprehension of judaizing, for only in 1600, the Pope, Clement VIII., by a special constitution permitted its employment. Unhappily great abuses followed, and the style in vogue was, we are told, feeble, petty, leading to wandering thoughts and "chopped up into little bits," and at length designed only to tickle the ear with modulation borrowed from the theatre. Councils therefore required a reform, which should produce grave, devout, distinct music, without unbecoming lightness, fit for the House of God and to sound forth His praise, with words distinctly uttered and altogether conducive to its holy purpose: and a French Synod forbade all but grave, simple music for chant and organ, without repetition of the words in the Creed, and in the hymns Gloria in Excelsis and Sanctus, such as would beseem a ball-room rather than a Choir. In 1657, Alexander VII. prohibited any imitation of a peculiar or dance-like style or "burning," as an old writer says, "unhallowed fire in holy censers." The stately and majestic tones of the organ were gradually lost and buried by the strains of an orchestra; and a great Canonist condemns as unlawful the use of violins, harps, citterns, trumpets, and flutes, which he says were tolerable only so long as they did not distract the thoughts of a congregation.

Such is the history of the musical service in foreign countries. In England the figures in the front of the Minstrel's gallery at Exeter, on the capital of the Minstrel's Pillar at Beverley, in the Angel Choir of Lincoln, and on corbel and carving, show the very instruments which were employed; and in a lately printed inventory of Meaux Abbey, at least two centuries older than the Reformation, we find two organs are at the west end and one in the Choir, and naturally expect some notice of an Organist. The earliest are said to have been the Friars, but certainly the Benedictines followed their example, as we find at Durham, the offices of Organist and Master of the children combined, "he was bound to teach those six children to singe and to plaie on the organs every principall daye when the Monnks did sing their High Masse, and likewise at Evensong." At that time there were three paires, one daily used at ordinary service, one at the north side of the Choir, large organs called the Cryers used only on special days, and the wooden organs over the Choir door used only on principal feasts, and resembling, we are told, those of York and St. Paul's, the finest in England.

William Thorpe was told, to his discomfiture, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, that "organs and good delectable songs quickened and sharpened more men's wits than should any sermon." (Bale's Works, p. 103.) But Latimer used violent expressions about "piping playing and curious singing" (II. 348) "descant pricksong and organs" irritated ears that loved to hear only the sound of their own voice in the pulpit. (Wordsworth Ecc. Biog., III. 36.) "Organs and curious singing" were considered "proper to Popish dens—cathedral churches," (3 Whitgift, 392,) though Roger Hutchinson had the candour to own that "both song and instruments be laudable and approved ceremonies in God's Church." (Works 285). Those innovating Bishops, Grindal and Horne, disapproved of "measured chanting and the sound of organs," (I. Zur. 178, 358), and in due time, when the Puritans became rebels, they plucked down organs, as at Peterborough and Chichester, and made merry amid their profanity, and outraged common decency.

In 1590, at Wimborne Minster, the "Organist" wore a surplice of Holland, which cost 21s. 3d. In 1517, the "organ player received 3s. 4d., and for a "manuell" 2s. 10d. In 1534 the "bedeman" "blew the organs." In 1676, the Organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster, received £20, and the blower £2 a-year out of the burial fees to the clerks. In the reign of Edward VI. the organs were placed frequently in a loft; and at the dissolution of St. Stephen's Chapel, Westminster, the "iii. payer of organs in the Upper Chapell and j old payer in the Nether Chapell" were valued at £13 13s. 4d.; from this prominence, happily, they are now gradually displaced. "iij long settells for servants to sytt upon the loft that the one pair of organs stode upon." (MS. Inv. St. Mary-at-Bowe, Westchepe.) At Foulsham a pair cost £12. (6 Edw. VI.) Bernard Smith's organ at St. Margaret's, Westminster, cost £200. In 1562 organs were retained by a single vote in convocation. (Card., Conf. 40.) In 1620 Charles and James I. at St. Paul's attended service on Mid-Lent Sunday "performed with organs, cornets, and sagbuts." (Heylin, Cypr. Anglic., 83.)

In 1570 Bishop Horne, at Winchester, desired that "the organs be no more used in service time, and the stipend for the organ player turned to some other godly purpose." (MSS. Winchester College.)

At the time of the Reformation, in the Statutes of Cathedrals of the New Foundation, the Organist appears in order to add to the solemnity of the daily service which was to be "celebrated as a daily Laud of God with singing and great joy." Besides the other Clerks, one was to be elected by the Dean and Chapter of honest life and good repute, skilful in singing and playing on the organs, who shall devote himself (studiosè vacabit) to teaching the boys and playing the organ in Divine Service; at one time "he is called Master of the Choristers," and could be removed after three monitions. At Winchester College, in 1692, £2 10s. were paid for a Sackbut for the use of the Choristers. The Caroline Statutes of Canterbury (1636) recognise the Organist as of "custom that hath long subsisted in the Church," "two Sackbutteers" and "two Corneteers," and permit the Dean and Chapter to select the Organist or one of the Minor Canons or Clerks to teach the Choristers to sing, according to their ability. The Statutes of Wells (1263) and of Exeter (1276), prescribed that every Vicar (Clergy who represented the Dignitaries and the Major Canons, whether priests, Deacons, or Sub-deacons, in their absence) should be able to play on a musical instrument. At Exeter (1540) the Choristers were to be taught by the Clericus Capellæ. At Hereford, proficiency on the viol or harp was indispensable to success on the part of an applicant for admission to the Choir. And at Westminster there is a provision that the Choristers should play on an instrument.

The stipend of an organist in the New Foundations, as at Westminster, was equal to that of a Minor Canon: the former receives for his annual fee £4, for livery 30s., and for commons £6 1s. 8d.; the latter, if also Precentor, had in addition, 40s., or at Rochester, £5 2s. 8d., and as Precentor £2, whilst the Master of Choristers was paid £5 7s. It is much to be wished that as the office of Organist is of such importance in the choral service, his position was more clearly defined, and that by means of an adequate stipend he might be relieved from the drudgery of private tuition, and enabled to devote himself to his high calling exclusively. His skill now must be greater than that of his mediæval, or even more recent, predecessor, when we find such entries as the following:

1374 For removing the organs from chapel into hall and preparing them for the play, 5s.
1407 For the expenses of 6 scholars carrying the organs from chapel to the Bishop's house at Waltham, 9d.
1415 For linen cloth bought to cover the organs of the college to be carried to Clere, 20d.
For waxing the said cloth, 20d.
For two ash poles to carry the said organs, 8d.
4 Hen. IV. For a pair of organs bought at London, with their carriage, £6 3s. 4d.
1421 For a pair of organs bought at London, 100s.
1520 An organ cost £13 6s. 7d.
1570 A pair of organs cost £6 13s. 4d.
1630 For 2 lbs. of tinglass used in constructing the organ, 7s.
1666 For a musical instrument called harpsican for the use of the chapel, £4 9s. 6d.
For its carriage from London, 10s.

The question arises what are the relative duties of the Organist and Precentor in the New Foundations where he is not a permanent dignitary but simply an officer elective by the Dean and Chapter. The Dean has the charge of seeing that "all Divine Services are decently performed." The Precentor is to be one of the Minor Canons, elder in years and superior in learning and manners, whose duty is to guide the singers in church, decently to lead the singing and to have obedience paid him by the Minor Canons and Clerks, and the others of the Choir to sing what he directs, to note absences and keep the Choir books. The Master of the Choristers or Organist, skilful in singing and as a performer on musical instruments, has the instruction of the boys committed to him; at Westminster to teach them in the science and exercise of these requirements and their other duties in choir, whilst the Precentor of the choir, chosen by the Dean as superior to the other Priests in skilfulness of singing, is to preside over them and the other inferior ministers and singers, and his office is to prescribe the mode, order, and persons who are to sing the Common Prayer in church, and note irregularities. At Ely the Master of the Choristers is to be chosen in addition to the Clerks for his skill as a singer and organist, to teach the boys and assist in singing the Divine Service. No rules can be more distinct and precise as regards the Precentor's right of direction (regere chorum), and the Organist's duty of instruction. One of the most learned Canonists decides that the office of the Præcentor is to preside in choir, and to direct the Canons, Clerks, and other ministers in things pertaining to the order of singing the Divine office, and to arrange that it be offered to the Most High with gravity and due order. But this observation on his power and authority does not apply if he holds merely an office without administration, as, in that case, the power of ordering in the choir belongs to the first dignitary or President of the choir deputed by the Chapter, according to the custom of each Church.

The appointment of an Organist in the Old Foundations varied in date, but may be generally fixed in the 17th century. At Chichester his duty was to be in the choir until the psalms had been sung, and then, having "done his duty up at the organs, return to the choir to bear his part again."

In parish churches the Organist, under the Incumbent, has the direction of the choir, and there should be no infringement of his authority by the introduction of lay persons bearing fictitious titles,* who would be eminently useful in leading their respective sides of the choir (the parish priest alone being the president), but err against taste, as well as precedent and ordinary sense, in adopting privileged names which are but empty sounds in their case.

MUSIC AND THE REVISED CODE.

By Henry C. Lunn.

The incompetence of committees, acting under official "authority," to examine into musical matters has been so long manifest to all who have really studied the art and its requirements, that no surprise could be felt when it was found that, although music was understood to be included in the new Revised Code, the inspectors selected as examiners knew nothing whatever of the subject. This was thoroughly in consonance with the usual Governmental treatment of the art in this country, and quite in accordance with the manner in which the great question of musical education had been discussed and settled by that formidable body the Society of Arts. But we must confess our astonishment when we first read the astounding fact that this ignorance, which had been so often displayed by pompous and patronising Members of Parliament whenever the subject of music was introduced in the House of Commons, was looked upon as a reason for not examining into and reporting upon the state of the art under the new Revised Code. Here, indeed, is a hopeful sign that at length music shall be admitted to its right place; for this confession of inability on the part of the inspectors shows not only a personal modesty, which cannot be too highly commended, but it proves the admission of the fact that the subject had better be omitted from the Revised Code altogether than be entrusted to the care of persons who are not duly qualified for the office. As we have already said, however this theory may have been tacitly recognised in other arts, it is so thoroughly new with regard to music, that we can readily imagine the awkward position of Mr. Forster, when, on receiving a deputation upon the question, he found himself, for the first time, conversing upon the matter with persons who understood what they were talking about. The novelty of the situation must, perhaps, however, have been an agreeable excitement to a man so thoroughly used up in the consideration of "definite subjects"; and his frank confession of utter ignorance on the art, although it might disqualify him in the minds of musical men from delivering judgment on the case, was, at least, infinitely preferable to that assumption of knowledge to which we have been hitherto accustomed when the matter has been under official discussion.

* The Precentor is a permanent dignitary collated by the Bishop in Cathedrals of the Old Foundation, Salisbury, Chichester, Exeter, Wells, Hereford, Lincoln, Lichfield, St. Paul's, and York; and in them the Organist is not a statutable officer except as holding a lay clerkship. But in the New Foundations the Organist is a statutable officer under this title, as well as the Precentor, who must be a Minor Canon and likewise appointed by the Dean and Chapter; that is, at Durham, Rochester, Canterbury, Worcester, Carlisle, Peterborough, Chester, Norwich, Oxford, Bristol, Gloucester, and in the collegiate churches of Westminster, Windsor, Ripon, and Manchester. (The two latter being now cathedrals.)

We do not know whether it was supposed that the omission of music from the Code would be taken quietly by the public: if so the disappointment must have been great; for, no sooner was the fact announced, than letters appeared from the most eminent members of the profession, leading articles were written in the newspapers and musical journals, and a system of baiting was steadily maintained in the House of Commons, which Mr. Forster bore with an equanimity which could scarcely have been preserved had he not felt that apathy on the subject which effectually armed him against any attack that could be made. Amongst the letters which appeared may be mentioned those from Mr. Henry Leslie, Mr. J. Alfred Novello, and the Rev. J. Curwen, all expressing regret that the teaching of music in elementary schools was not considered advisable, and suggesting methods by which the difficulties might be removed. Mr. Leslie, naturally enough, mentions the names of several well-known persons who have for years been engaged in musical tuition, with whom the authorities should at once put themselves in communication. Mr. Novello especially dwells upon the beneficial mental and physical effects which would result from making singing a portion of education, and says, that in all probability it would be found the most attractive of all the studies. Mr. Curwen, with a pardonable desire to introduce the Sol-fa notation, is desirous of covering the incompetence of the inspectors to examine into musical proficiency, by extending to schools "that system of ear exercises which has for some years been introduced into the Christmas examinations at the Training Colleges, the examinations of the Society of Arts, and in the local examinations of the Universities." Then Mr. Forster has also had deputations to receive, the first one waiting upon him before the resolution to exclude music had been made public, although we can scarcely imagine that even at that time it had not been secretly formed. At this interview he had to listen to Sir John Pakington, Mr. Tufnell, Mr. Edwin Chadwick, the Rev. Canon Cromwell, and Mr. J. F. Puttick, to all of whom he made a most gracious reply—not in the slightest degree committing himself to any course of action, regretting that he had never been taught music (which certainly might have been accepted as an argument against allowing others to grow up in like ignorance), hoping for some practical suggestion on the subject, and bowing the deputation out with many thanks. But a more formidable body had to be encountered when it was known that music was to be omitted from the subjects for which grants would be given, and this time he had to act upon the defensive. Mr. Godfrey Lushington spoke most energetically upon the question, and urged that a knowledge of the art was "valuable to everyone, whether as an individual, as a member of a school or church, or of society in general." Mr. Curwen proposed the plan of examination which he had already suggested in his letter, and Mr. J. W. Glover, on behalf of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, pointed to the excellent results of the system, and especially alluded to the yearly demonstrations given by the children of the Association at the Crystal Palace. Of course Mr. Forster agreed with them all as to the value of music; and, curiously enough, whilst adhering to his determination to exclude the subject from the Code, affirmed that the inspectors being incompetent to examine into the matter was the "fault of the education of the country." It would be almost impossible, he said, to change the inspectors; and the difficulty of organising inspection was great enough as it was. He promised to consider the subject most carefully next year; and when Mr. Curwen spoke of the rapid progress music was making in this country, and suggested that it was "a dangerous thing to check a horse in its leap," Mr. Forster replied that "it was a very small horse and a very short leap," a curious remark, some may think, coming from the same person who had just admitted that "he agreed with the most enthusiastic of the deputation as to the value of music."

It is, perhaps, easy enough to argue a question at the head of a deputation, however reluctant a Government official may be to listen to you; but everybody must feel a sense of gratitude to Mr. Winterbotham, who, in his place in the House of Commons, spoke a few home truths upon music before a whole assembly notorious for indifference on the subject. He could not understand, he said, why music was to be excluded from the Code. "What was the effect produced by the study of music? Music required order, method, attention, and quickness; it practised the memory, and was the only study that really cultivated the imagination of which young and untutored minds were capable." He had himself, he said, studied music, and could assure the members that "the pleasure it now occasioned him was so intense, that it even led him sometimes almost to resist the fascination of coming down to the House."

It might naturally be supposed by persons unacquainted with Government routine that when the incompetence of the inspectors to examine into the subject of music was discovered, the assistance of those who had made the art the study of their lives would be called in to help them. But this straightforward method of viewing the matter is by no means warranted by official precedent. A number of "Admirable Crichtons" must be searched for; and, as it might take a year to procure them, a year's delay must be granted. Mr. Forster distinctly stated that "he thought the Chancellor of the Exchequer would make a considerable objection to additional special inspectors," so that the persons appointed are presumed to know everything. Geography, history, grammar, algebra, geometry, philosophy, physical geography, the natural sciences, political economy, languages, "or any definite subject of instruction," are matters upon which one individual is supposed to be sufficiently informed to become an inspector: whether the attempt to procure any aid surreptitiously will be considered a crime, we know not, but we strongly suspect that "needlework," which is also included, will be too often judged of by the inspectors' wives, unless a careful watch is placed over the examiners.

We can scarcely bring ourselves to believe that, after a twelvemonth's consideration of the subject, any system so absurd as that now propounded will be acted upon. When we consider, as Mr. Leslie says in his letter, that many persons have come prominently forward of late years as musical instructors of the masses, all of whom would be too glad to aid the good cause, either by their valuable advice or by their personal exertion, it seems incredible that their assistance should be refused, and that Government should still insist upon keeping the matter in its own hands. The very fact of the delay gives us a ray of hope, for it will afford time for musicians to express their opinions freely upon the subject. Again, it must be remembered that as the first step towards real knowledge should be a confession of ignorance, very much has been gained by the candid admission of the Government that the reason of the exclusion of music from the Revised Code was that the inspectors knew nothing about it. It now behoves all interested in the question to see that when the Code is re-considered next year, the matter, instead of being thrown aside, shall be placed under the care of those who do know something about it; and, as this knowledge can scarcely be expected to grow up in the course of a twelvemonth, we may indulge a hope that those inspectors who, according to the Governmental report, appear to know everything but music, may give way to acknowledged professors of the art, whose report may be of some real service. At all events, Mr. Forster may rely upon it that the subject, having been once awakened, will not be allowed to drop; and if, without some satisfactory proof of ability, the Government still insists upon appointing inspectors to examine music, the public should insist upon appointing musicians to examine the inspectors.

 Since the above article was in type it has been decided that, although music is not to be included amongst the special subjects in the Revised Code this year, a provision is to be inserted in the new minutes that after the 31st March, 1872, the grant to day-schools shall be reduced "by one shilling per scholar on the average number in attendance, unless the inspector be satisfied that vocal music is made a part of the ordinary course of instruction." Of course, this pre-supposes that music shall immediately be taught in all elementary schools without being recognised by the Government, for a year. We can scarcely imagine that this will satisfy those who have the matter really at heart; but at all events, it shows that the voice of the musical public has been heard, even in the House of Commons.

Those who believe with us that the status of art in a country depends very largely upon the status of artists, will be rejoiced to hear that the honour of knighthood has been conferred upon Mr. Jules Benedict, Professor William Sterndale Bennett, and Dr. George Elvey, organist of the Chapel Royal. The long career of these well-known and estimable professors renders it unnecessary to do more than add our word of approbation as to the justice of the choice.

No one who has watched with interest the progress of music in England can doubt that of late years it has so thoroughly entered into the hearts and homes of the middle classes, that a knowledge of the creations of the great composers of the world has become almost a necessity; and we may be quite satisfied that when this feeling has taken root with the people, and grown upwards, it will not be very long before the aristocratic classes will yield to its power, and endeavour by every means to foster an art of which too many had been trained to the belief that ignorance was a virtue. That this gradual change has been materially influenced by the social position which English musicians have earned for themselves can scarcely admit of a question; for an art must always linger whilst its followers do not inspire respect. How this respect has been recently awakened by the musical artists of this country, and how respect has ripened into that feeling of brotherhood which springs from the conviction that all must be on an equality who are engaged in the divine work of elevating and refining our fellow men, it is unnecessary for us now to dwell upon. As we have already said, the one thing wanting was that this truth should be recognised by those whose power in the state rendered such admission of high practical value. That it has been acknowledged by the head of the nation, and that proof has been given of such acknowledgment by the only available means of conferring a mark of personal distinction, is a matter upon which we heartily congratulate, not only the recipients of such honours, but the whole musical profession of England, every member of which should see that the titles thus acquired by his fellow artists have, indirectly, ennobled himself.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

During the past month Mr. J. F. Barnett's Cantata, "Paradise and the Peri," has been performed with much success, the principal vocalists being Madame Vanzini, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley. The work was directed by the composer. On the 18th ult. Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's Symphony, "Es mus der Frühling Werden," was given, and most warmly received. Perhaps no work of the German composer could have been selected to display more thoroughly his great command of the resources of the orchestra, and certainly no one could have been chosen more suitable for a mixed audience, for the melodious character of every movement, especially the Adagio and Allegro vivace, must always please, even those who cannot appreciate the artistic treatment of the themes and the excellence of the instrumentation which characterise the entire Symphony. Dr. Hiller conducted the work, and afterwards performed Mozart's "Coronation" Concerto on the pianoforte, with that delicacy of touch and perfection of executive power imperatively demanded by the character of the composition. The two cadenzas, introduced by him in the first and last movements, were remarkable specimens of improvisation and in thorough sympathy with the nature of the work. Dr. Hiller also performed two of his own solos, an Etude, and a piece called "Zur Guitarre," both of which were highly effective and much applauded. The vocalists at the same concert were Madame Viardot-Garcia and Signor Piccioli.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

At the second of these concerts, on the 1st ult., Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given, the solo parts being sustained by Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Chatfield, Madame Patey, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Raynham, and Mr. Santley. With such an exceptionally fine group of artists as principals, it is almost unnecessary to say that the work has rarely, if ever, created a more profound impression upon the audience. Madame Rudersdorff gave the whole of her music, especially the "Widow scene," with excellent effect; Mr Sims Reeves was in good voice, and sang the two tenor solos as he alone can sing them; and Mr. Santley gave a finer reading of the Prophet than we have yet heard, even from himself. Miss Severn sang the whole of the trying declamatory music of Jezebel with true dramatic feeling, and a good word must be given to Miss Chatfield, who lent efficient aid in the concerted pieces. Mr. Raynham displayed a good voice and style in the Recitatives entrusted to him, and Messrs. Stedman, J. T. Beale, and Smith were also valuable accessories. All the choral music went well, "Thanks be to God," the "Baal" choruses, and "Behold! God the Lord passed by," being given with remarkable precision and energy, the increase of power, so perceptible in the choir this season, being under such perfect control that no undue prominence in any department can be heard. Mr. Barnby conducted with much judgment, and Mr. F. A. W. Docker presided at the organ. The hall was literally crammed in every part, and a large number of persons were unable to obtain admission.

The third concert, which took place on the 15th ult., commenced with Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's Cantata, "Nala and Damayanti," written for and performed with such success at the last Birmingham Festival. As this was the first representation of the work in London, much interest was excited, not only on account of the presumed merit of a composition by one of the most eminent German artists, but because it was announced that Dr. Hiller would himself conduct it. It may readily be imagined that the reception of the composer was most enthusiastic, and that every note was listened to with marked interest and attention by an audience amongst which were to be seen many of the most celebrated professors now in the metropolis. We entered fully into the characteristics of the Cantata at the time of its production at Birmingham, and have now only to mention that the excellence of the work appeared to be fully appreciated by a London audience, a fact amply attested by the applause during, and at the conclusion of, the performance, Dr. Hiller being greeted with the warmest demonstrations of approval on his retirement from the orchestra. The principal parts were rendered to perfection by Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Emily Spiller (who most efficiently replaced Miss Fanny Chatfield, absent from illness), Miss Julia Elton, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. Considering that the music was quite new to Mr. Barnby's choir, the excellent manner in which the choruses were sung deserves the highest commendation. The graceful Chorus of Maidens which opens the Cantata was given with a delicacy and beauty of tone rarely attained by so large a body of vocalists; and in all the portions where the full choir was employed, especially in the grand chorus, "Hail! fearful King," the perfect balance of the voices was strikingly manifest.

The second part of the concert included some interesting works by M. Gounod, whose appearance in the orchestra was hailed by a burst of applause, as unanimous as it was richly merited, and it was indeed some time before he was allowed to take his place at the conductor's desk. The song "There is a green hill far away," commenced the part; it was finely given by Mr. Santley, and, if possible, was followed by a more enthusiastic encore than that with which it was greeted at the Philharmonic Concert. The two works performed for the first time were a Quartett, "O Salutaris Hostia," and a Psalm, "De Profundis," both of which achieved a marked success. There is a quiet, devotional feeling about the Quartett in true sympathy with the words. The theme is extremely simple, and the syncopated accompaniment with which it commences, is in excellent contrast with the smooth vocal parts. The Psalm, "De Profundis," contains two choruses, a quartett, and a recitative and chorus, the merits of which are scarcely to be dismissed with a passing word of commendation. M. Gounod is so thoroughly sincere that he has a right to demand equal sincerity on the part of his critics; and we must therefore here content ourselves by bestowing unqualified praise upon the masterly manner in which both the voices and instruments are treated, and refer our readers to our reviewing columns for a more detailed notice. The principal parts were excellently sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Julia Elton, Mr. Cummings, and Mr. Santley. We have left ourselves but small space to speak of Handel's noble Tenth Chandos Anthem (with some very judicious extra accompaniments supplied by E. Silas), which concluded the concert. The choral parts of this work were given with fine effect (under the conductorship of Mr Barnby), and Mr Santley's delivery of the solo, "Like as the smoke vanishes," could not be surpassed.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The fifty-ninth season of this Society commenced at St. James's Hall on the 8th ult., special interest being given to the concert by the presence of M. Gounod, who had accepted the invitation to conduct four of his own pieces, and by the exhibition of a fine bust of Beethoven, which had been gracefully presented to the Society by a lady of Pesth, in acknowledgment of the intimate connection between the great master and the Institution, not only during his artistic career, but in the days of his last illness, when help was spontaneously offered with a tenderness and delicacy which sank deeply into the heart of the dying composer, and reflected enduring honour upon the donors.

The reception awarded to M. Gounod must have convinced him of the high estimation in which his talents are held in this country. The applause bestowed upon his symphony in D, which opened the concert, must not, however, be accepted as a mere complimentary welcome. Although an early work, it is full of beauties, and is written throughout with a clear and defined purpose which must always render it attractive. The Andante, in D minor, is exceedingly graceful; and the last movement, preceded by a rather long Introduction, has a most melodious theme, and is replete with points of the utmost interest. Of his Saltarello, written expressly for the Society and played at this concert for the first time, we must speak in terms of unqualified praise. It is full of life, and scored with that mastery over the resources of the orchestra so remarkably evident in all the works of this composer. That it was received with enthusiasm can scarcely be doubted; and the excellent manner in which it was executed will form a precedent, we hope, for future performances by other bands; for it is not a movement which can bear any but a first-class rendering. Another novelty by the same composer was a sacred song, "There is a green hill far away," the excessive beauty of which, added to its sympathetic interpretation by Mr Santley, produced an encore too unanimous to be resisted. There can be little doubt that this new composition—which will be found noticed in our reviewing columns in the present number—must very rapidly win its way to popularity, although Mr. Santley has so thoroughly made it his own that any other baritone vocalist who attempts it will be placed at a serious disadvantage. The Scena and Cavatina, "Far greater in his lowly state," from "Irene," was the only other work by M. Gounod included in the programme, and this was so well given by Miss Edith Wynne as to elicit the warmest applause. By express request of the lady who presented the bust of Beethoven, the composer's symphony in C minor was performed—perhaps hardly so well as we have heard it on former occasions — and Herr Joachim played Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto with that perfection of tone, executive power, and intellectual appreciation of the author's meaning which place him at the head of all living violinists. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's highly dramatic Scena, "My child is fled," from his Opera "Robin Hood," was sung with good effect by Mr. Santley; and the concert concluded with Weber's Overture, "The Ruler of the Spirits." Mr. W. G. Cusins, the conductor of the Society, was warmly welcomed on his entrance into the orchestra. The performance was attended by the Princess of Wales, the Princess Christian, and Prince Arthur. At the second concert, which took place on the 22nd ult., the performance commenced with Mendelssohn's "Reformation Symphony," every movement of which was received with marked applause, the melodious "Allegro vivace" being, as usual, encored. The other orchestral pieces were Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's highly imaginative and masterly overture "The Wood-Nymphs," Mozart's "Jupiter" symphony (as it seems now universally called), and Weber's Overture to "Oberon." Madame Schumann's rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, was one of the most interesting features of the evening. Madame Parepa-Rosa, who was to have appeared for the first time since her return from America, was unfortunately too ill to fulfil her engagement, and her place was supplied by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, who gave "Deh vieni non tardar" ("Le Nozze di Figaro"), and "Ah quelle nuit" ("Le Domino Noir") with excellent effect. The other vocalist was M. Jules Lefort.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CONCERTS.

The second of these concerts, given on the 23rd February, was termed "Historical," and contained a highly interesting selection of music, ranging from the year 1500 to 1780. Several works strange to our modern concert-rooms, were performed, amongst which may be mentioned a scene from Carrissimi's Oratorio "Jephthah," the solo parts well given by Madame Viardot Garcia and Mr. Vernon Rigby); a "Sanctus" and "Hosanna" from one of Scarlatti's Masses; and two French airs by Lefèvre, sung with excellent effect by Madame Viardot. Mention must also be made of two pianoforte works, performed by Herr Pauer, the first Frescobaldi's "Corrente e canzone," and the second Lulli's "Suite de pièces," in E minor, both excellent specimens of a past age. The third concert took place on the 9th ult., and consisted exclusively of sacred music. Mrs. Weldon was highly successful in the solo part of Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," and also in a new and excellent sacred song, by Mr. Leslie, called "The Rainbow." Madame Poole displayed a fine contralto voice and cultivated style in Cherubini's "O Salutaris;" and Miss Ellen Horne, (a pupil of Mr. Leslie,) created a marked effect in Haydn's "With verdure clad." Mr. Sims Reeves sang with his usual artistic finish, "If with all your hearts," and the Recitative and Aria, "Deeper and deeper," and "Waft her, angels." The choral music was given throughout the evening with that perfection to which Mr. Leslie has now accustomed his audience, Bach's fine Motett, for double choir, "The spirit also helpeth us," Wesley's "In Exitu Israel," and Mendelssohn's "Judge me, O God," being amongst the most effective pieces.

DR. FERDINAND HILLER'S RECITALS.

No better lesson on the true and enduring school of pianoforte playing could have been given than that so earnestly delivered in a practical form by Dr. Hiller at his three Recitals during the past month, at the Hanover Square Rooms. A pupil of Hummel, who was himself a pupil of Mozart, this incomparable German artist reproduces a method which was born and nurtured in the days of pure music; when phrasing and expression came from the heart, through the fingers, and digital dexterity was reserved for its legitimate use. That the greatest effects in art are produced by the simplest means is as true in executive as in creative art; and those who listened attentively to Dr. Hiller's performance—coloured as it was by the minutest shade of feeling—must have felt convinced that a true pianist can be quiet without being tame, and passionate without being spasmodic.

The programmes have been devoted entirely to the compositions of Dr. Hiller, the most novel item at the first Recital being an "Operetta without Words," for two performers, in which the composer enjoyed the invaluable co-operation of Madame Schumann. This work is full of fancy, and replete with points of the utmost merit. The names of some of the movements are "Air of the maiden," "Scolding song," "Aria Buffa," "Chorus of Hunters," Duettino, "Romance of Goethe," and "Drinking song." These titles will sufficiently indicate the amount of variety in the composition. The "Drinking song" was enthusiastically encored, and the conclusion of each movement was greeted with the warmest applause. A Serenade for pianoforte, violin and violoncello (played to perfection by MM. Hiller, Joachim and Piatti), a Duet for pianoforte and violin (equally well performed by the composer and Herr Joachim), and a Gavotte, Sarabande and Courante, for pianoforte alone, were also most interesting features in the selection, the Serenade, especially, eliciting plaudits as unanimous as they were deserved. Songs were also given by Miss Fanny Chatfield and Madlle. Drasdil, all of which were well received. At the second Recital a selection from the "Operetta without Words" was repeated, in consequence of its effect at the previous concert, and a Solo, "The two Ghasels," a free imitation of a form of Oriental poetry, in which the same word or the same rhyme returns continually—was one of the greatest successes of the evening. Other works were also given, and received with the applause which their merits demanded; and Madame Rudersdorff contributed several vocal pieces. The third Recital included a Quartett for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello, the executants being MM. Hiller, Joachim, Straus, and Piatti, and a Phantasiestück, Adagio and Studies, for pianoforte and violin, so perfectly given by the composer and Herr Joachim as to elicit the loudest applause, one of the Studies—a composition full of character—being encored. Dr. Hiller also charmed his hearers by his excellent performance of some unpublished sketches for the pianoforte alone, all of which were so thoroughly fresh and original as to warrant us in hoping that they will not long remain in manuscript. The improvisations given on the pianoforte by Dr. Hiller at the conclusion of the second and third Recitals were highly interesting, not only as specimens of ready inventive power, but of executive skill; and the applause at the conclusion of each was most enthusiastic. The vocalists at the last concert were Madame Rudersdorff, Madlle. Drasdil, and Miss Alice Fairman; and amongst the solos given must be especially mentioned a Prayer, so exquisitely sung by Madlle. Drasdil as narrowly to escape an encore. At all the concerts Signor Randegger accompanied the vocal music with the delicacy and refinement of a true artist.

The Twentieth Annual Report of the Committee of Management of the Choir Benevolent Fund announces that only one district choral festival has been held in aid of the funds during the year, the committee not feeling justified in undertaking the expense attendant upon such festivals without receiving assurances from the local authorities that some successful result might be relied upon. Having long desired the means to enable the Association to grant annuities or pensions to widows of members in cases of necessity, two morning and two evening concerts were given at Hastings, but the sum realized, after paying all expenses, was only £20. 12s. We sincerely trust that this laudable object of the fund may become widely known, for we are convinced that there are many benevolent persons who, were the matter brought prominently under their notice, would be glad to assist so deserving a charity, and enable it to extend its benefits.

The members of the North London Philharmonic Society gave their sixth concert this season on the 27th February, at the Royal Free Hospital, for the amusement of those patients who were sufficiently recovered to permit their removal to the lecture-room. The instrumental pieces included several overtures, a selection from "La Grande Duchesse," &c. The vocal music was supported by Miss Gaskin, Messrs. Gray, Platt, Hepburn, Purdue, and Griffith. The concert was very successful. Mrs. Oscar Smith presided at the piano, and Herr Petersen led the band, which, as usual, was under the direction of Mr. Heath Mills, of the Wesleyan College.

A festival in connection with the Alexandra Orphanage for Infants was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon Street, on the 8th ult., Lord George Hamilton, M.P., presiding. The musical portion of the programme was under the direction of Mr. A. Walker, who was assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, Miss Ada Percival, Mr. B. Elliott, Mr. J. S. Soul, and Mr. Wilson Rayner. Mr. Berthold Tours presided at the pianoforte.

We are informed that the Dean and Canons of Manchester Cathedral have presented Master Alfred Clelland with a bound volume of Mendelssohn's Grand Sonatas for the Organ, being the first prize for instrumental music offered for competition by the choir boys.

An Evening Concert was given by the St. Mark's Society, Upper Holloway, on Monday, the 20th February, at Grove Road Schools, before a numerous audience; vocalists, Miss Marienne Potter, Mr. Tarling and Mr. Beardwell. Several members of the Society also contributed instrumental solos. Harmonium, Mr. Beardwell, junr.; violin, Mr. Fogg; flute, Mr. James; pianoforte, Mr. Davison. Mr. Squiers conducted. The concert was very successful, and reflected great credit on all concerned.

A concert, under the direction of Mr. Stanley Mayo, R.A.M., was given on Wednesday, the 1st ult., at the South London Assembly Rooms, Camberwell. The programme, which was well selected, was rendered by the following artists: Mrs. Graham, Miss Egerton, and Madame Clavequin, Mr. Stanley Mayo, and Mr. J. B. Bolton. Mrs. Graham was encored in "The Sailor Boy's Dream." Mr. J. B. Bolton gave a spirited rendering of Campagna's new song "The Scout," and also joined Madame Clavequin in the "Singing Lesson" Duet. The programme was agreeably varied by a solo on the flute by Mr. Brown, and two pianoforte pieces by Miss Sutherland.

The Annual Soirée, in aid of the funds of the Working Men's Institution, took place at Greville House, Paddington Green, on Thursday, the 9th ult. The musical arrangements were under the direction of Mr. H. Goodacre. Vocalists: Messrs. Adams, Jones, Sparrow, Goose, Goodacre and Nott; Pianist, Mr. Fowle. The attraction of the evening was materially increased by solos on the violin and concertina by Messrs. Lee and Pearce. The songs and glees were excellently sung, and elicited much applause. The room was filled, and the concert was a decided success.

The Choir of Finsbury Chapel, Finsbury Circus, gave its Third Annual Concert on Tuesday Evening, the 21st February; Artists: Miss Marienne Potter, Miss Amy Roberts, Miss S. Davis, Mr. Alfred Speer, Mr. Edwin Gray and Mr. B. Trotman. The programme comprised selections from Handel's "Messiah," and various pieces from the works of other eminent composers. The concert gave great satisfaction, and was successful in every respect.

The fourteenth anniversary of the Southwark Choral Society was celebrated on the 21st February by a concert in St. Peter's Schoolroom, Emerson Street, Bankside. The main portion of the programme consisted of harmonised pieces, and included two new compositions,—a semi-chorus, "I will sing unto the Lord," composed by Mr. Ralph Horner, and a setting of the grand old hymn "Dies Iræ," by Mr. W. H. Harper. There were also several other interesting pieces—for instance, the trio, "There remaineth a rest" (sung by Miss Jenkins and Messrs. Rossiter and Tew), and the chorus "The Lord thundered," from Howell's "Land of Promise;" the fine war march, for men's voices, from Horsley's "Gideon;" and John Milton's quaint Madrigal, "Fair Orian" (the latter sung by Mrs. Shoveller, Miss Jenkins, and Messrs. Jenkins, Rossiter, Shoveller and Palmer). Sir M. Costa's Triumphal March in "Naaman" was played as a harmonium solo by Mr. Harper, and Mr. Ralph Horner gave Mendelssohn's pianoforte piece, "Andante and Rondo Capriccioso," with much effect. The conductor, Mr. J. Courtnay, came forward as usual to give the thanks due to the Rev. W. M. Mungeam for allowing the use of the rooms to the Society, and for presiding, but made an addition to the verbal expression by the presentation of a silver inkstand, subscribed for by the members of the Society. Mr. Mungeam returned thanks in an appropriate speech for this unexpected present.

The last Soirée of the College of Organists took place on the 14th ult., when a most attractive programme was performed, under the direction of Mr. Alex. S. Cooper. It included, among other novelties, prize Anthem, "The Lord is my portion" (Coll. of Org., 1870), by F. E. Gladstone; Prize Glee, "Give me music," (Round, Catch and Canon Club, 1871), by Mr. Coutes; Easter Anthem, "Now is Christ risen"; and two new part-songs, "Sweet Echo" and "Cheerily," by Alex. S. Cooper. The instrumental pieces were Dussek's Grand Sonata, "L' Invocation," and two of the recently published 48 Canons and Fugues by the great contrapuntist, Klengel. These were all well rendered by the conductor, and the part-music was sung in excellent style by members of the choirs of Lincoln's Inn and St. Michael's, Cornhill. Mrs. R. Limpus and Miss Louisa Harris sang several solos, and a characteristic song, by Mr. H. C. Nixon, entitled, "King Christian," was effectively given by Mr. A. Hubbard.

We hear that Herr Capellmeister Reinecke, will arrive in London early in April and remain here for the greater part of the Season. Amongst other compositions he brings a new overture, written in celebration of the conclusion of peace, which we trust to have an opportunity of hearing.

Under the title of the Welsh Choral Union, a Society has recently been formed, directed by the well known harpist, Mr. John Thomas, and two concerts have already been given, with the most gratifying results, at the Concert Hall, Store Street. Miss Megan Watts, Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Elena Angèle and Mr. Lewis Thomas have been the principal vocalists, and the harp playing of Mr. John Thomas, and the pianoforte performance of Mr. Brinley Richards have been prominent features in the programmes. The choir is highly effective; and the selection of part-music has been exceedingly interesting, several compositions being given for the first time. The accompanists at the pianoforte have been Mrs. Henry Davis and Mr. W. H. Thomas.

We regret to hear that Madame Parepa-Rosa who should have made her first appearance since her return from America at the State Concert at Windsor Castle on the 21st. ult, and who was also to have sung at the second Philharmonic Concert has been ordered by her physicians, on account of ill health, to give up all engagements at concerts, as well as at the Royal Italian Opera, and go abroad for a time, to recruit.

The 156th anniversary festival of the Most Honourable and Loyal Society of Ancient Britons, held in aid of the funds of the Welsh Charity School, was celebrated on the 1st. ult. (St. David's Day), at Willis's Rooms, King Street, St. James's, under the Presidency of the Earl of Dudley. The musical arrangements were entirely entrusted to Mr. Brinley Richards, and to this circumstance no doubt may be attributed the fact of the whole of the compositions performed being Welsh, and the whole of the artists (with the exception of Madlle. Angèle, who sang in place of Miss Watts,) being natives of the Principality. This is as it should be at a Welsh festival; and we are glad to find that Lord Dudley, in his able speech, alluded in the most glowing terms to the national music of Wales, and particularly to the presence in the room of the triple-stringed harp, which he hoped would never again be absent from their festivals. A very excellent selection of music was given during the evening, the vocalists being Miss Bagnell, Miss Davis, Madlle. Angèle, Mr. Howells, Mr. John Evans, and a numerous choir, conducted by Mr. William Davis. The programme included "The March of the Men of Harlech," "St David's Day," "God bless the Prince of Wales," an Ode (sung by the children of the schools) written by Sir Francis Hastings Doyle, composed by Mr. Brinley Richards, "From the smoke of the streets, from the pall of grey vapours," and Mr. Thomas's song "Tros y Garreg." A solo on the Welsh triple-stringed harp was played with much effect by "Jones of Bala," harper to Mr. William Jones. The whole of the performers gave their services gratuitously. The list of subscriptions —including 100 guineas from Her Majesty, and 150 guineas from the chairman—amounted to £800.

Miss Florence Wydford gave her first evening concert at the Pimlico Rooms, on Tuesday, the 7th ult., to a large audience. Mr. Charles Stanton was most successful in his songs, the second, "Only," by Virginia Gabriel, being loudly re-demanded. Miss Wydford sang with much effect; and in a duet with Mr. C. Stanton both artists received warm applause. Among the other vocalists we must not omit to mention Miss Horder, Messrs. H. Clire, Mahy, and Horder, all of whom met with great and deserved success. Miss Constance Hersee was the solo pianist, and Mr. C. P. Mann accompanied in a highly efficient manner.

The 23rd concert of the season, in aid of the Victoria Hospital for Sick Children, was given on Monday, the 20th ult., at the Pimlico rooms. Messrs. Charles Stanton and Leonard Walker, Miss E. Woolgar, and Miss F. Wydford were the vocalists. Mr. Stanton was encored in Allen's song, "Maid of Athens," and Mr. L. Walker was recalled after each of his songs, "Largo al factotum" ("Il Barbière"), and "Miei rampolli" ("Cenerentola"). A selection of glees was also carefully rendered. Miss Marie Ford, a youthful pianist, played a fantasia with marked success and was encored. The room was crowded.

On Monday Evening the 13th. ult. a concert of Sacred and Secular Music was performed by the members of the St. James's Singing Class, Holloway, on behalf of the Church Schoolmasters and Mistress' Benevolent Society. Amongst the most successful vocal pieces were the Anthem "In Jewry," (Dr. Clarke Whitfeld) Quartette, "I love my love in the morning," (Allen) and Chorus "Carnovale," (Rossini) all of which were encored. In a violin solo "Air with variations," (De Beriot) Mr. Clively shewed considerable artistic skill, as did also Mr. H. Spencer, junr. (The hon. sec. of the class) in the Tenor Recit and Air (from the "Creation,") "And God created man," and "In native worth." Mr. Manly accompanied with his usual good taste and ability. Mr. Esau, who conducted, could not but be gratified with the result of this, the first public appearance of the class.

A performance of the "Messiah" was given at the Town Hall, Shoreditch, on the 28th February, for the benefit of the family of the late Mr. G. H. Simson, Organist of Shoreditch Church. The principal vocalists were Madame Sydney Smith, Miss Marienne Potter, Mr. Kerr Gedge, and Mr. Samuel Crome, and the band and chorus numbered 250 performers. The Hall was crowded to excess; the concert gave great satisfaction, and we are glad to learn that a large sum was realized for the bereaved family.

The arrangements for the Passion Service in Westminster Abbey on Thursday, the 6th inst., at present completed are as follows. The choir will consist of nearly three hundred surpliced choristers, accompanied by a double orchestra. For the accommodation of this body of musicians large platforms are being erected in the rear of the seats ordinarily used by the choir of the Sunday evening special services. The west doors will be thrown open to the public, and there will be no collection, the whole expense being borne by the Dean. The service will commence at seven o'clock in the evening. The members of the choir, having walked in procession to their seats, the order for Evening Service will be intoned as far as the commencement of the Psalms, when the solemn music of Bach's "Passion" will begin. After the chorus, "Have lightnings and thunders," the Dean will preach the sermon. This will be followed by the second portion of the Passion music, after which the Dean will pronounce the blessing.

The Prospectus of the Drury Lane Opera, under the management of Mr. Mapleson, calls upon us to place implicit faith in the lessee's power of judgment, for we have so many new names, without any announcement of their claims to our notice, that we cannot but look upon the season as to a certain extent experimental. Of course we cling to the fact of Madlle. Titiens being engaged as a guarantee that the principal parts in many operas will be efficiently filled; but we regret to miss the name of Mr. Santley; and turning to the cast of Wagner's "L'Olandese Dannato," we find that the part of L'Olandese, which Mr. Santley almost made his own last season, is to be filled by a Signor Bignio. "Arrangements are in progress," however, to secure the services of Madlle. Christine Nilsson, on her return from America; and the company includes Madlle. Ilma di Murska, Madame Sinico, and Madame Trebelli-Bettini, artists too well known to need a word of comment. Amongst the names already familiar we may mention Signori Fancelli, Vizzani, Rinaldini, and Foli; also Signor Borella, who established himself as an excellent and reliable baritone at the Lyceum Theatre, during the performance of the Italian Opera Buffa. It is unnecessary to do more than announce the names of Madlle. Marie Marimon, Madlle. Ida Benza, Madlle. Cecile Fernandez, Signori Bentami, Sinigaglia, Nicolini, Mendioroz, Moriani, Sparapani, Rivès, and Bignio. We are glad to find that Sir Michael Costa will retain the post of conductor during the season, and hope that he will have a better chorus to reign over than he had during the last few years at the Royal Italian Opera. By the list of dancers engaged, we imagine that ballet is to be a feature; but whether the old feeling can ever be revived is, we think, very questionable, and hardly, perhaps, desirable. The only promised operas which can at all claim to be novelties are Donizetti's "Anna Bolena," which has not been played for twenty-five years, Flotow's opera, never performed in this country, called "L'Ombra," and Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto." The season will commence on the 15th inst.

The North London Sacred Harmonic Society gave a performance of Handel's Oratorio, "Judas Maccabæus," on the 7th ult., at the Lecture Hall, Charlotte Street, Caledonian Road. The solos were sung by Misses Vincent and Hulford, Messrs. Philby and H. G. Froome. Miss Vincent gave the soprano music with excellent effect; and Miss Hulford, who possesses a good contralto voice, distinguished herself in her share of the duets as well as in her solos. Mr. Philby sang the tenor part very fairly; and Mr. Froome was highly successful in his rendering of the various pieces allotted to the bass. The chorus and band were thoroughly satisfactory. Mr. Bent led the band, and Mr. James Boyce conducted.

A very successful concert was given at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on Monday the 20th ult., under the direction of Mr. W. H. Hillier, assisted by Miss K. Poyntz, Madame Hillier, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. R. Temple, and Mr. E. Osborne. The programme was miscellaneous. Amongst the concerted-music a new trio, by T. Ridley Prentice, "Oh, the Summer Night," (well sung by the three ladies,) received the greatest applause. The vocalists exerted themselves to the utmost to please the listeners who testified their approval by frequent encores. Mr. Hillier was unfortunately suffering from cold, otherwise his share of the programme would have been equally well received. Mr. Osborne presided at the pianoforte, and also sang two humorous songs in the course of the evening with much success.

A concert was given at the Birkbeck Institution on Wednesday evening, the 22nd ult., under the direction of Mr. John Henkin. The first part contained selections from Locke's music to "Macbeth," the whole of which was excellently sung, and well received Mr. Medwin Whyte, a baritone, displayed much taste in the singing of Hecate, although the music was somewhat too low for him. The second part consisted of part-songs, glees, &c., amongst the most successful of which were Hatton's "Arise, my love," and Barnby's "Sweet and low." The "Marseillaise," given by Madame Everatt, was received with enthusiasm and encored. Mr. Wm. Hiles was the accompanist. The hall was crowded.

We have much pleasure in giving publicity to the description of a new Transposing Pianoforte, which has been forwarded to us by its inventors, Messrs. G. Carr and Co., of Cannon Street. "At the end of the piano keyboard frame is fixed the ordinary action, firmly attached by means of two thumbscrews. The keys themselves rest upon a long narrow plank of wood, also fixed to the key-frame; this 'key-block' passes between two narrow slots cut in the two cheeks on either side of the piano. It will thus be seen that the key-frame carries the keys, action and key-block, the whole, though in a piece, slides freely together up or down the bed of the piano. For the purpose of determining the key in which it is desired that the piano be set, small holes are drilled, at the distance of a semitone apart, in both ends of the key-block; in these holes moveable pegs are inserted, so that the necessary exact distance between the hammers and the strings is precisely adjusted. Additional strings are provided at the top and bottom of the piano to arrange for the shifting, consequently the performer has at all times a full-compass instrument to play upon. The piano can be set in any key, even by a child; the mechanism is so simple that it cannot get out of order, and the additional cost of one of these instruments is but trifling."

The Prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera for 1871 holds out a most tempting promise to subscribers, although very little novelty is announced. The company is extremely powerful, and includes most of the artists who appeared last season. Madame Patti, Madame Parepa-Rosa (who, by the way, will be prevented by indisposition from appearing at present) Madlle. Sessi, Madame Pauline Lucca, Madlle. Scalchi, Madame Miolan-Carvalho, Madame Monbelli, and many other familiar names at this establishment will be found in the list of lady vocalists. Signor Mario is to take his final leave of the public at the end of June, having first appeared in most of his favourite characters. Amongst the tenors are included Signori Mongini, Naudin, Bettini, and many other eminent artists; and amongst the baritones and basses, Signori Graziani, Cotogni, Ciampi, and Bagagiolo. We are also glad to find that M. Faure has been engaged, his first appearance since 1864. There are no positive novelties in the catalogue of operas to be given; but Halévy's "La Juive," Cimarosa's "Il Matrimonio Segreto," and his lesser known comic opera "Le Astuzie Femminili," will be welcome revivals. We regret that Mr. Gye has thought it necessary to preface his list of singers and operas by inflated paragraphs on their merits. Surely it does not require to be written of Signor Mario that "whether we consider his personal attributes or the wonderful charm of his presence on the stage, it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that Signor Mario has never been approached as a lyric artist," and the lines of Moore, which are quoted, are certainly more applicable to what he was than what he is; nor does anybody who knows anything about operatic music desire to be reminded that "of all the productions of Mons. Auber's prolific pen, 'Les Diamans de la Couronne' is certainly one of his most charming inspirations." Before concluding, we must mention that two conductors will again compete with each other—Signor Bevignani and Signor Vianesi. The season is announced to commence on the 28th March, which will be after our journal has gone to press.

A very agreeable musical evening was given at the Russell Institution, Great Coram Street, on Monday, the 6th ult., under the able direction of Mr. J. C. Beuthin. The principal vocalists were Miss Banks, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. Albert James, Mr. Stedman, Mr. Frank Massey, and the "Standard Quartette," consisting of Messrs. Cooke, Stedman, Massey, and Travers. Several vocal solos of a popular character were sung during the evening, amongst the most successful of which were T. Cooke's song, "Over hill, over dale," by Miss Banks; "Norah's Courtship," by Miss Lucy Franklein; "The Vagabond," by Mr. Frank Massey; and two songs—Allen's "Maid of Athens," and Braham's "Anchor's weighed,"—excellently given by Mr. Stedman, who, with a pure tenor voice and cultivated style, seems rapidly making his way in the concert-room. The part-singing by the "Standard Quartette" was exceedingly good, and the selection was varied by the pianoforte performance of Herr Lehmeyer.

We learn from the Italian journals that Miss Dove Dolby, of whose great promise we had occasion to speak some months since, is very rapidly approaching that eminence in her profession which she has so zealously worked to gain. She has recently sung and played the part of Siebel in "Faust," at only a short notice, with most unequivocal success. The managers of La Scala were anxious to retain her services for the entire season, but a previous engagement compelled her to decline the offer, and she is now playing in Austria, where she is achieving honours in some of the leading operatic parts, that of Marguerite, in the "Huguenots," amongst the rest.

An evening concert took place at the Victoria Hall, Bayswater, on the 9th ult., under the direction of Mr. Lansdowne Cottell. Madame Delise and Miss Dwight received much applause, and Mr. W. C. Bell and Madame Bernard were recalled. Mr. M. Ascher displayed a voice resembling a pure soprano; and Mesdames Bull, Alfiardi and Zalmani, the Misses Christine Levani, Hensman, Kate Fuller, Manning, and Mr. W. Powell (a pleasing tenor) contributed to the success of the concert. The Hyde Park Union, under Mr. Lansdowne Cottell's conductorship, sang two choruses with excellent effect.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Benjamin Congreve, which occurred on Thursday, the 23rd ult. Mr. Congreve was the author of several popular anthems, part-songs, &c.

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Norma. An Opera in Two Acts, by Vincenzo Bellini. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

This Opera forms the fourth of the series of Novello's Octavo editions of the standard lyrical works, and will be found in every respect worthy of comparison with those which have preceded it. We have always imagined that if ever a version of these popular Operas were issued in England, where the original words were placed under the notes, and any English translation already existing used with them, the discrepancy between the two would be too obviously shown to satisfy any really conscientious editor. That this has been found to be the case with the Opera before us may be seen by the following extract from the Editor's note:—"As it may appear to many that a new translation of this popular work is uncalled for while there exists the excellent one of Mr Planché, it may be as well to say that his version is not quite complete, and that it is an exceedingly free translation, both as to the metre of some of the rhythmical pieces and as to the distribution of syllables throughout the recitatives; so much so, that could arrangements have been made to use it in this edition, the Italian and English words could scarcely have been printed together so as to be intelligible."

The due expression of the notes has been as carefully considered in this as in any of Mrs Macfarren's former translations, and the printing is a model of clearness. The Editress says:—"In this, as in other Italian works that will subsequently appear, the popular editions will be followed; and if the sforzati fall for the most part upon unaccented notes and syllables, it is presumed that this is conceived to be expressive in Italian music." The slight sarcasm conveyed in the above remark is, indeed, too true; but Norma has now passed beyond criticism, and we have only to congratulate both the editress and the publishers upon having produced so perfect an edition of an Opera which neither vocalists nor audience ever seem to grow weary of.

Saltarello. Composed for a full orchestra, by Charles Gounod. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Agnes Zimmermann.

Gounod's characteristic and vivacious "Saltarello," played for the first time at the Philharmonic Concert on the 8th ult., is here transcribed for our household instrument by one of the best arrangers of the day. It is published both as a solo and duet; and although it is needless to say that the four hands can grasp more of the score than two, an excellent idea of the piece can be obtained in the solo form by any person gifted with elastic fingers and a mind capable of entering into the true spirit of this exciting movement. The composer has thoroughly caught the feeling of this Roman dance, which, unlike the Neapolitan Tarantella, usually halts on the first note of one of the triplets. The whirling introductory bars on the dominant harmony lead the hearers to a positive craving for the entry of the principal theme, the measure of which is kept up with scarcely any cessation to the conclusion. There is little modulation; but the change from A minor to F major comes just in the right place to give freshness to the piece; and the passage into the tonic major, in which key the composition concludes, is also exceedingly welcome. Those who have heard the "Saltarello" in its original orchestral form will be glad to have their recollection of it revived by this adaptation of the work to the pianoforte; and those who become acquainted with it for the first time through Miss Zimmermann's clever transcription, will welcome it as an interesting and highly effective piece.

De Profundis. Psalm cxxx. English and Latin words. Charles Gounod.

From what better source could a composer draw such an unfailing supply of words for sacred music than from the Psalms? In them are richly though simply expressed thoughts, of prayer, praise and penitence, suitable to, and suggestive of the deepest resources of melody, and also sentences which demand the most dramatic treatment which modern music can employ. It is not a matter for wonder that so many Psalms have been over and over again set to music, but rather, that every great musician has not devoted all his genius to the one object of painting them in sounds. Perhaps a setting of one of them offers as good a test of the powers of a composer as could be found, for certainly large numbers have tried their hands at it and failed. Had Mendelssohn written nothing besides his Psalms, his name would have been handed down to posterity to his honour. In his "Why rage fiercely the heathen" and "O come let us worship" are conceptions second to none in his other works. By his "In exitu Israel," our Englishman Wesley has justly created his fame. But it is unnecessary to multiply instances of the power which the Psalms seem to possess of drawing out the purest inspirations of a composer's heart. It is to be regretted that we may not use Latin Anthems in our Churches and Cathedrals, as the language, by its conciseness as well as its grandeur, is peculiarly adapted to music, but we must live in hope that Englishmen will learn some day to treat our beautiful version with entire freedom from those obstructive trammels which have choked many a so-called Church musician. The adaptation of English words to this "De Profundis" of Gounod is remarkably good, following the Latin closely, yet not unsuitable to the form of the music. The work consists of four numbers. The first, an Adagio, commences with a few bars of introduction, after which the tenors sing a soft and solemn theme, which is taken up by the trebles, tenors, and basses in three different octaves, a treatment producing a very fine effect. The time now changes to Andante; and whilst tenors and basses (divisi) sing "fiant aures tuæ intendentes in vocem deprecationis meæ," an independent melody flows along, supported by an arpeggio accompaniment. At the words "Si iniquitates observaveris" some fine and dramatic chords are employed. A reminiscence of the first theme, with the re-introduction of the words "De profundis clamavi ad te!" closes the number The second number is for four voices soli, the tenor and bass leading with a short phrase, which is elegantly handled in both parts. When the soprano enters it is to support a very fine enharmonic change at the words "Sustinuit anima mea in verbo ejus," (not "Sustinu*i te*" as printed), the time again increasing. The return to the key further on in the movement is brought about by a transition which must strike every musician as most masterly and grand, the restlessness of modulation being followed by the calm produced by the original theme given in the treble part, and harmonised by the other voices. The third number, "A custodia matutina," is a chorus of great power. A descending chromatic subject is given out while a dominant pedal-point is sustained, which is changed to that of the tonic as the other parts enter with their answers. A few bold chords, by voices and accompaniment alternately, lead into an Allegro in which several subjects are worked out almost "fugato." So melodious and beautiful is this movement that it cannot be too highly praised. The recitative "Et ipse redimet Israel" (No. 4) is followed by a Fugue which, though somewhat free in style, and interspersed with fragments of a baritone solo, makes a fitting climax to the Psalm.

This work must add to the already abundant fame of its author. Those who expect to find in it traces of the light style in which he equally excels, will be agreeably disappointed. It is never trivial, solemnity is stamped on every page; the conceptions of the composer have risen with the sublimity of the words, and the result is a work which is an important and admirable addition to sacred music.

O Salutaris Hostia. Motett. Charles Gounod.

This is a most elegant and graceful composition, which, owing to the compass of the voice parts and an absence of all difficulties, is within the reach of any quartett (soprano, contralto, tenor, and bass) who have any sympathy for beautiful melody. The subject is so treated that each part in turn has an opportunity of appreciating its merits. The chromatic sequence at the words "Bella premunt hostilia," though of the simplest construction, is most effective. The second appearance of the theme is in an inverted form, but there is none of that straining after mere device which makes 'counterpoint' (and justly so) almost synonymous with ugliness. Such a thoroughly devotional tone breathes through the whole motett that it is difficult to believe it comes from the pen of the author of "Faust." Will not M. Gounod while he is amongst us, exiled from his most unhappy country, write some anthems?

There is a green hill far away. Sacred Song. Poetry by Mrs. C. F. Alexander. Music composed by Charles Gounod.

M. Gounod is so thoroughly earnest in all his settings of sacred words that, even where we are inclined to disagree with him in his method of expressing that earnestness, we cannot but admit that, from his own point of view, he has never for a moment lost sight of that reverence for his subject without which no composer can hope to produce works of any real value, either to art or religion. The song before us, however, can scarcely excite any such difference of opinion; and we have only to record our admiration of those merits of the composition, on a close examination, which appeared fully shared by the audience at the Philharmonic concert, when it was sung for the first time by Mr Santley, and enthusiastically encored. The poetry, which is admirably suited for music, is taken from an attractive little volume called "Hymns for Little Children," by Mrs. C. F. Alexander. The placid opening, in F minor, is deeply devotional; and amongst many points of excellence in the truthful expression of the words, may be mentioned the wailing effect of the minor ninth on the dominant to the line—"He died that we might be forgiven," and the change to the major on the words—"There was no other good enough," the chords which accompany the song up to this point being now replaced by triplets. The conclusion, too, where, between the vocal phrases, the harp is heard for the first time, is extremely beautiful. Of course the song is much enriched by the orchestral accompaniments; but the pianoforte part is excellently written, and we can scarcely doubt that with contralto and baritone singers this latest work of one of the most popular composers of the day, will become an established favourite, both for concert-room and domestic performance.

Beware. (I know a maiden.) Song. Written by H. W. Longfellow Music composed by Charles Gounod.

These excellent verses of Longfellow have tempted so many of our native composers to give them a musical colouring which shall sympathise with the archness of the poetry that it becomes curious to see how they have been set by a foreigner. It is almost unnecessary to say that M. Gounod's treatment of the subject is thoroughly original and highly effective. The light symphony which ushers in the opening subject is in good keeping with the character of the song; and the figure in the accompaniment, which runs above the voice, and is carried on with few interruptions, as an independent part, gives much vitality to the vocal theme, which expresses the words of warning with true musical accuracy. A good effect is gained by the frequent pauses on the admonitory phrases, "Take care" and "Beware;" and the few bars of triplets in the pianoforte part form a good contrast with the rest of the accompaniment. The song will require to be sung with a due regard to the meaning both of the poet and composer; but vocalists possessed of such dramatic power may safely rely upon the effect of the composition.

The Daisy. Song. The words translated from the French of Alex. Dumas, fils, by Henry Dulcken, Ph.D. Music composed by Charles Gounod.

Should the residence of M. Gounod in this country be merely temporary, he is likely to leave us many interesting reminiscences of his sojourn amongst us; for in addition to the compositions we have already noticed (all of which were written very recently) we have here a vocal trifle which, in its way, is a perfect gem. We should say that it is simplicity itself, were there not artistic touches throughout the song never to be found in the works of those smooth ballad writers who, with their sugary melodies and obvious harmonies, have done so much towards vitiating the taste both of vocalists and listeners within the last few years. The little poem of Dumas has been so happily rendered into English verse by Dr. Dulcken that we much doubt whether M. Gounod's music does not flow more naturally to the translation than to the original words. The theme is extremely pleasing, and an excellent effect is gained by the measure of the poetry, the short lines adding an irresistible charm to the melody. After the close on the dominant, some transient modulations, as unexpected as they are pleasing, express the feeling of the poetry with remarkable fidelity, and we are led back to the original key by the simplest possible means. We trust that M. Gounod will give us many more of such songs before he bids us adieu.

O God, whose nature and property. Full Anthem for Four Voices. By S. S. Wesley.

A short and easy Anthem, ecclesiastical in style, but with plenty of melody. The "Amen," which grows, as it were, out of the closing words of the prayer, forms an admirable climax to this excellent composition.

I am Thine, O save me. Full Anthem for Five Voices. By S. S. Wesley.

This short Anthem is full of those characteristics of style which Dr Wesley's previous works have led musicians to associate with his name. It cannot be too highly commended.

Come unto Me all ye that labour. Anthem. By Sir G. J. Elvey, Mus. Doc.

As a whole this Anthem will not compare favourably with that charming composition of Stafford Smith to the same words, so well known in our cathedrals, but it has the recommendation of simplicity and "swing" (as it is inelegantly termed), qualities which will, no doubt, to a great extent, atone for its general want of character.

The Lord is full of compassion and mercy. Anthem. Composed by Sydney H. Williams.

We take this Anthem as a promise of better things to come. With a little more definition of purpose and experience in construction, Mr. Williams may make contributions of some value to the stock of English Church music. At present we note certain crudities—and a few errors—amongst much that is commendable.

Thirteen Hymn Tunes. Composed by J. Tilleard.

1. God, who madest earth and heaven. 2. Hear our solemn Litany. 3. To bless Thy chosen race. 4. Brightly gleams our Banner. 5. Thy will be done. 6. Though nature's strength decay. 7. Onward Christian soldiers. 8. O Lord God eternal. 9. Onward and upward. 10. Lead kindly Light. 11. Rock of ages. 12. Rejoice for evermore. 13. Nearer, my God, to Thee.

Of these Tunes—many of which contain all the qualifications necessary to the making of a good Hymn Tune—Nos. 1, 3, 5, 6, 10 and 13 are the best, being generally marked by a good telling melody, and harmonies which, although modern, (and sometimes a little too modern,) are, upon the whole, satisfactory. Occasionally Mr. Tilleard seems to lose sight of the fact that Hymns are, as a rule, intended for the service of God; as in No. 8, where the initial quavers are somewhat objectionable, and in No. 7, which is decidedly secular. But, on the other hand, he exhibits a warmth of devotional feeling—as in No. 5—which hardly leaves anything to be desired. And again, as a specimen of a good solid Tune, No. 3 is in every way admirable. No. 10 might achieve some popularity were the rhythm reconsidered. As it is at present, a really good Tune is spoilt by an arbitrary and unnecessary adaption of a false rhythm. No. 13 is altogether good—the popular Hymn "Nearer, my God, to Thee," having seldom received a better setting. The sequence near the end deserves the most unqualified praise.

Mr. Tilleard would do well however not to lose sight of that refinement which distinguished many of his earlier compositions. This quality is doubly essential in music intended as an offering in the sanctuary. If a composer omits to infuse refinement into a secular composition cultivated persons will avoid the use of it. But if it be wanting in the music used in our daily services the matter is much more serious—as every one is here expected to take part. On the whole these compositions in many places exhibit Mr. Tilleard's talent at its best.

The Wreck of the Hesperus. A Cantata, for Solo Voices and Chorus. Words by Longfellow. Music by Thomas Anderton, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

We know not if this Cantata is scored for the orchestra; but as it comes before us, with only a pianoforte accompaniment, there is a decided effect of thinness in the instrumental part, which in many portions of the work causes a feeling of disappointment. It is true that the composition lays no claim to be judged by too severe a standard, the words having merely received that appropriate and unpretentious setting which will place the music within the reach of any amateur choral Society; but there are many places where the dramatic power displayed in Longfellow's poetry positively demands some sympathetic colouring by the composer, and Mr. Anderton has, we think, treated these parts with a timidity which has perhaps prevented his doing himself full justice. The work opens with a somewhat mysterious introduction, in A minor, which leads to a chorus in C major, commencing with an unison passage for tenors and basses. The entry of the four voice-parts on the words "Blue were her eyes as the fairy flax," is highly effective, and the theme is melodious and in sympathy with the poetry. The warning of the old sailor, and the manner in which it is received by the skipper, who blows a "whiff from his pipe," and laughs a "scornful laugh," are both well depicted in a tenor and bass solo; but the descent of semitones to express the moaning of the wind, and the minor scale passages accompanying the voices when the fury of the tempest is at its height, are methods of musically illustrating a storm which have become as conventional as the letting down of the back-hair of a stage heroine to denote madness; and we have only therefore to record that the composer has done everything right and proper under the circumstances. There is true pathos in the gentle melody sung by the father to his child, and also in the notes given to the little girl, who, in frightened accents, presses questions upon him, the agitato accompaniment well representing the raging sea beneath them; but the accompanied choral bit which follows is somewhat feeble; and although there is much cleverness in the concluding portion, which describes the finding of the child on the beach, lashed to the mast of the wrecked vessel, it cannot be said that the music rises to the level of the poetry. We presume that the members of the Solihull Musical Society, to whom the Cantata is dedicated, have already tested its merits before a public audience; and we can easily imagine that the unpretending character of the composition will ensure its ready acceptance both with singers and listeners, the choral parts being throughout written with much clearness and the solos being always effective. We here only judge its claims to be ranked amongst the enduring productions of its class; and feel certain from the earnestness displayed in the work, that the composer will value no opinion that is not spoken honestly and without reserve.

Valentine's Day. Four-part Song. Words by R. R. Dealey. Music by Mirana.

Mirana has often come before us lately as a writer of graceful vocal solos, and here for the first time she appears as a composer of a four-part song. A cheerful melody, carefully and unobtrusively accompanied, this song may find favour with many choral Societies, and is simple enough to become popular with those domestic choirs which are now so rapidly growing, rather we hope for the performance of music in the drawing room than for "drawing-room music." The words are well expressed, and the voice parts are smoothly written throughout. The poet may, on the whole, be congratulated on having produced some verses well suited for music; but we do not like the line "True love our hearts shall still animate," especially as the accent in singing must be thrown upon the last syllable of the final word. The composer has, however, got over the difficulty with tolerable skill.

Tre Canti Popolari Toscani. La musica composta da Morton Latham.

1. O tu che dormi.
2. Vedete, la quel Rusignol.
3. O Uccellin, che vieni di Fiorenza.

These songs are eccentric but full of character, and there is an attempt to escape from common-place which is always commendable, even if not always successful. The first, vibrating between A minor and C major, has a tuneful subject, and a good effect is gained by the unexpected harmony of A flat major, commencing on the words "Risvegliati un pochino." The two unaccompanied bars, where the voice merely sings the intervals of the key-note triad, followed by the holding E, form a conclusion somewhat out of the beaten track. The second song at least has the merit of flowing on in an unbroken melody, in spite of the temptation to turn aside and twitter with that delusive "rusignol," which has been the ruin of so many composers. The theme is carefully harmonised and well accompanied. No. 3 is intended, we presume, for a low contralto, and in many parts is extremely effective. The song, however, appears strangely broken into fragments, and the ear in vain seeks for repose. The phrase, "O uccellin," in many places receives a strange setting, especially at the conclusion, where the voice runs up the entire chord of the dominant seventh on the word "O." At all events the whole of these compositions are thoroughly vocal, and that is no small merit in these days when the voice is so constantly made subordinate to an elaborate and overwhelming "accompaniment."

L'Allégresse. Morçeau de Salon, pour Piano.
Galop Brillant pour Piano.
Par Siegfried Jacoby.

The first of these pieces has some merit, and at least bears no trace of the patchy style so often observable in the "Salon" compositions of the day. Although simple in construction, it contains some good writing, and will require good playing to realise the intention of the composer. It is full of life throughout, and this result is not gained by a series of rapid passages, but by constant variety of character in both hands. We can conscientiously recommend this little sketch as superior to many pianoforte compositions, we have seen of far greater pretension. The second piece is somewhat more conventional. Most of the passages are brilliant and lie well for the hand; but the theme strikes us as trite and used up. We know how difficult it is to invent anything new for the subject of these dances, the pattern of which has been set for years; but we should like to see some attempt at originality in the treatment of the parts, if part-writing be admitted in brilliant Galops. The composition, however, flows on freely enough; and, although as we have said, we are not startled by any novelty, the composer never seems at a loss what to do next. Pianists who wish for a new and lively Galop will find this one please the majority of listeners; and they need not, perhaps, trouble themselves, in pieces of this nature, about the opinion of exacting critics.

Bourrée, from the 4th Sonata for Violoncello, by J. S. Bach. Transcribed by Berthold Tours.

We are glad to find that so many of our rising composers are devoting themselves to the resuscitation of works which require only to be known to be appreciated as they deserve. These "transcriptions" for the pianoforte of movements written originally for other instruments, unlike the so-called "transcriptions" of trashy modern songs—which are usually intended to show the powers of the transcriber, rather than the composer—will do much towards cultivating a taste for the solid works in art; and amongst the many reproductions of the old compositions in this form recently published, this Bourrée will, we think, take a prominent place. Mr. Tours has performed his task with true artistic modesty, merely introducing Bach and allowing him to speak for himself. The passages lie well under the hand, and the movement is by no means difficult to play: that it will delight both performer and listener—provided either have not been spoiled by the show music of the day—it will scarcely be necessary for us to add.

The voice of the Waterfall. Two-part Song.
Life is passing away. Ditto.
Words from "The Afterglow." Composed by Ciro Pinsuti.

Whether the author of "The Afterglow," whoever he may be, ever intended his poem for music, we know not; but certainly, if he did, he may congratulate himself upon having fallen into good hands, for the songs composed by Signor Pinsuti from that work which have recently come before us, are amongst his very best compositions, and here are two more, fully equal in merit with those which have preceded them. "The voice of the Waterfall" is a song which should not be attempted unless a good pianist can be secured for the accompaniment, the light triplets, given to both hands, requiring not only to be played with elasticity of touch, but with a sympathetic feeling for the singers which is not always united with good executive power. An excellent effect is obtained by the two voices commencing in unison; and the sudden cessation of the accompaniment, which re-appears at the end of each vocal phrase, is also a point of interest. The solos, where the change from G major to E flat takes place, express the words with remarkable fidelity; and the subdued accompaniment, in triplets, is in good keeping with the feeling of the poetry. We can scarcely doubt that this composition will become popular. The second song, as the title indicates, is in decided contrast with the one just noticed. Here the voices are all powerful in giving intensity to the mournful sentiment of the poet. The phrase, in B flat minor, accompanied only with holding chords, at the commencement, leads very effectively into the tonic major, with a flowing quaver accompaniment; and the flat third and sixth, which indicate the return to the minor, in the pianoforte part, show that the composer has deeply studied the intention of his author. Signor Pinsuti should persevere in the composition of works of this class, for such thoughtful songs as these cannot fail to be welcome.

Robert Cocks and Co.

The Carmarthenshire March. Arranged from the Score for the Pianoforte. Composed by Brinley Richards.

This spirited March, dedicated to the Right Hon. the Earl of Cawdor and the Officers of the Militia and Volunteers of the County of Carmarthen, is likely to become popular away from the locality for which it was written. It is a quick step in $\frac{6}{8}$ rhythm, and has a sufficiently catching melody to make it a favourite, not only on parade but in the drawing-room. The change from $\frac{6}{8}$ to $\frac{2}{4}$ rhythm—moving in two doublets instead of two triplets in the bar—contrasts well with the first theme. We can imagine that the effect of the march is materially enhanced when played by a military band, as the pianoforte can but faintly suggest the instruments intended by the composer.

Almond Blossoms. Song. Written by Helen Burnside.
The Old, Old Tale. Song. Poetry by William Hills.
Fairy Chimes. Vocal Duet. Written by William Hills.

Composed by Franz Abt.

The first of these songs is a charming little trifle, which all lovers of simple vocal music cannot fail to admire. There is no attempt at intensity in the setting of the words, and no striving after sensational effects in the harmonies. Vocalists and teachers will thank us for drawing attention to this graceful and eloquent ballad. In the second song we have more character in the accompaniment, the voice and pianoforte parts being inseparable, as in most of the German Lieder. The melody is extremely striking, and seems to fit the English words as if it had been originally composed to them. The change from G major to E flat major, where both melody and accompaniment move for the first time in triplets, is extremely effective, and the modulation into the original key, with the arpeggio accompanying the holding note in the voice part, is also a point of much interest. The "Fairy Chimes" will, we think, be an acceptable duet to vocalists who wish to produce much effect by simple means. The melody flows onwards in true sympathy with Mr. Hills' unpretending poetry; and the triplet accompaniment which runs on almost uninterruptedly throughout the composition, gives much life to a theme which, without such aid, might become somewhat tame. The solos are short, but they offer a welcome change from the constant two-part harmony, which is so apt to degenerate into a string of thirds and sixths.

Original Correspondence.

STATUE TO MENDELSSOHN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Respecting the wish of your correspondent, Thos. B. Guy, I cannot inform him the details of the steps taken for the erection of the statue of Mendelssohn in St. James's Park, but the result was that the application was not complied with. The statue was eventually placed in the Crystal Palace, where it still remains. It was uncovered on the 4th May, 1860, at the opening of the sixth season of the Palace, and a musical festival in honour of the composer was given on the occasion, the performances consisting of Elijah, the "Wedding March," the overture to the Midsummer Night's Dream, and the National Anthem, The orchestra consisted of about 3,000 performers, led by Mr. Costa; and the solo singers were Mdlle. Parepa, Miss Fanny Rowland, Madame Dolby, Miss Palmer, Messrs. Sims Reeves, W. Evans, and L. Thomas, and Signor Belletti. The band of the Coldstream Guards assisted. The day's proceedings wound up with a torch-light exhibition, and were throughout marked with great enthusiasm.

I may add that the statue is of bronze, and is of colossal size; and that the likeness to the great composer's figure is said to be very close.

Yours truly,

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—My object in troubling you with this is to call attention through your columns to the uncertainty and confusion which exists in the matter of Time in Music. When we consider that the words commonly used to mark time, such as Andante, Allegro, &c., are by no means constant in meaning (and, in fact, may almost be looked upon as indicating style rather than time), we need go no further to see that some more definite method of marking time would be a great improvement. Now we have this way—it is to mark music by the Metronome, which is, of course, perfectly definite and precise. But the fact is, not ten per cent. of ordinary pianoforte music is so marked, and the result is the uncertainty and confusion before mentioned. Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., have done a good work by marking Oratorios, Masses, &c. Mr. Charles Hallé has done the same for classical pianoforte music; but in the average pianoforte pieces, &c., the Metronome is treated as though it did not exist, or at any rate, had no bearing on them. It may be said that few persons have a Metronome, but the reason of that is (at least, in my opinion), that its use is so seldom indicated. If music were, as a rule, marked by it we should soon find almost as many Metronomes as pianos, and correct playing would be greatly promoted. I trust, Sir, that you will agree with me in these remarks, and in thinking that the sooner a definite and exact mode of marking time is substituted for the present loose and unsatisfactory style, the better it will be for all—composers, players, and hearers; and am

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Abingdon.—On Monday, the 28th February, the Abingdon Musical Association gave a miscellaneous concert, in the Council Chamber, the use of which was kindly granted by the Mayor of the borough. The first part of the programme consisted of songs, glees and choruses, which were sung in a very creditable manner. At the close of the first part one of Mendelssohn's piano concertos was performed by a lady, the wife of an eminent surgeon, in a manner that called forth much and deserved applause. The second part was devoted to Barnett's Cantata, The Ancient Mariner, and it is only fair to the members of the Association to say that it was evident the music had been studied with great care, the result being a performance of a very high character. At the next meeting of the Association, the profits arising from the concert, amounting to £15, were presented to Mr. T. W. Pacey, the conductor, as an earnest of the gratitude of the members for the zealous and gratuitous services which that gentleman had given, not only to this Society, but to other entertainments where the aid of a musical professor was desirable.

Adelaide.—The Christmas performance of Handel's Messiah, by the Philharmonic Society, was a decided success. The orchestra consisted of about 29 instrumentalists and 100 vocalists. The principal singers—Mrs. G. T. Harris, Miss Effield, Miss Nimmo, Miss Vaughan, Mrs. Walkley, Messrs. C. Lyons, E. H. Hallack, L. Grayson, G. C. Smith, C. C. Gooden, J. Brooks and W. S. Dyer—gave much effect to the solos, and the choruses were rendered with considerable power and precision. Mr. E. Spiller acted as conductor, Mr. R. B. White as leader, and Mr. James Shakespeare presided at the harmonium.

Aylesbury.—The members of the Vale of Aylesbury Sacred Harmonic Society gave their first concert for the present year on the 21st February, in the Corn Exchange. The works selected for performance were Beethoven's Mount of Olives (Engedi) and Sullivan's Prodigal Son. In the first named composition the principal parts were excellently sung by Miss Clara, Mrs. Taylor, Messrs. Wootton, Ingram, Gibbons and Taylor; and in Beethoven's Oratorio, the tenor music was most efficiently given by Mr. Ingram. Mrs. Parslow, in the trying soprano solos, being also entitled to the highest commendation. The success of the concert was materially aided by the energetic and intelligent conducting of Mr. Corfe.

Birmingham.—The Postmen's Annual Concert was given in the Town Hall, Birmingham, on the 2nd ult. Professor Bennett's May Queen formed the first part of the programme, the solo music being well interpreted by Madlle. Liebhart, Mdlle. Drasdil, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Orlando Christian. The band and chorus of two hundred voices was under the direction of Mr. C. Heap. Several ballads were introduced in the second part, and a violin solo by Herr Petterson. The members of the Philharmonic Union gave their services on this occasion, and the Hall was well filled.

Bushey, Herts.—On Monday, the 6th ult., a concert was given by the members of the Bushey Choral Society, in the new Hall, before a large audience. A number of anthems and glees were well sung by the choir. Miss Cecil created a very favourable impression by her rendering of an air from Il Trovatore. Mr. C. J. Bishenden, sang "La Marseillaise," assisted in the chorus by the choir, with much effect, and was enthusiastically received. Various other vocalists were thoroughly successful in the songs allotted to them. Mr. Wilshire conducted.

Camborne.—On Thursday, the 16th ult., the Misses Mitchell's complimentary benefit concert took place in the Assembly Rooms, before a large audience. The music was under the arrangement and direction of Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A., who also performed solos on the violin and violoncello. The programme included some of Bishop's well-known glees; the Wedding Chorus from Mendelssohn's Camacho; a part-song, "They sleep," by the conductor, and several songs, duets &c., the most noticeable of which were "Stars the night adorning" (Wekerlin), sung by Miss A. Mitchell, and re-demanded, "Ave Maria" (Gounod), by the same lady, "A mother's love" (Read), sung by Miss Mitchell, with violin obbligato, by Mr. Nunn, and "The message" (Blumenthal), sung by Mr. Harvey, and encored. A Romance, by Salaman, was performed by Mr. H. A. Smith on the corno di bassetto, and also other instrumental selections, in which Mr. G. J. Smith (harmonium) and Mr. Marrack (violoncello) took part.

Canterbury.—The twenty-second appeal of the resident musical professor, Mr. Longhurst, was responded to by a full room on Monday, the 20th February. The concert certainly deserved such extensive patronage, for both in the vocal and instrumental department, it was one of the best musical entertainments ever given in Canterbury. Madlle. Liebhart, Miss Julia Elton and Mr. Moulding (a new tenor) were highly successful in all their songs, and amongst the most effective of the instrumental pieces must be mentioned Mozart's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violin, (excellently played by Mr. Longhurst and Mr. H. Weist Hill), a fantasia for the clarionet by Weber (performed with true musical feeling by Mr. Lazarus) and a solo on the flute, given so brilliantly by Mr. Svendsen as to elicit much and deserved applause. The orchestral pieces included a cleverly arranged selection from Meyerbeer's Opera, Le Prophète and three overtures.

Cheltenham.—The musical celebration of St. David's Day in Cheltenham, has been so long a recognised fact that a concert of Welsh music on the first of March is looked forward to, as a matter of course, among the festive arrangements of the year. The performance on Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., in the Montpellier Rotunda, must have been a great treat for upon no former occasion was Welsh music heard to more advantage; the selection of songs, &c., being so varied as to please all tastes. Among the most characteristic incidents of the programme were, the performances on the Welsh or triple-stringed harp, by Mr. Gruffydd, Lady Llanover's harper, and the charming and unaffected singing of the young vocalist, said to be Gruffydd's daughter, who was dressed in the costume of the country. The other principal lady singer was Miss Watts, who was in excellent voice. Mr. Cummings, who has always been a great favourite at the St. David's Day's performances, had three songs assigned to him in the programme, and was as successful as ever in their interpretation. In the absence of Mr. Lewis Thomas, who for very many years has been the principal bass at these meetings, Mr. Halford, an amateur, sang the music allotted to him, and acquitted himself admirably, obtaining an encore for Mr. Brinley Richards's "Cambrian War Song," which he gave with much energy and spirit.

Chester.—At the Nineteenth of the Saturday Evening Entertainments, on the 4th ult., the chair was taken by Alderman Joseph Oakes, who congratulated the committee on the success which had attended their efforts this season. The programme consisted of trios, duets and songs, for the rendering of which Miss Ellen Glanville, Mr. Charles Stanton and Mr. Farquharson obtained considerable applause. The accompanist was Miss Kate Gordon. Mr. W. Warner Jones also gave a selection of pieces on the organ, which were much applauded. There was a good audience.

Devizes.—The Amateur Choral Society gave a performance at the Town Hall, on Tuesday the 7th ult., under the direction of Mr. J. T. Abraham. The programme included Mozart's First Mass, in C; selections from the Messiah and Creation; Pearsall's "In dulci Jubilo," &c. The band and chorus numbered about 60 performers; leader, Mr. Shaul. Mr. Sly presided at the pianoforte and Mr. W. Price at the harmonium.

Dublin.—The Glee and Madrigal Union gave an excellent Concert, on the 21st ult., at the Antient Concert Rooms, in Brunswick Street, before a numerous audience. An almost faultless performance of a charming programme might briefly and accurately summarise the opinion of every one who attended. Attwood's noble glee, "To all that breathe," opened the concert, and brought the full force of the Union—Miss Fennell, Messrs. Hemsley, Peele, Smith, and Kelly—before the audience. The glee was given better than we remember to have heard it sung at any of the former concerts. The "Spring's Delights," got the welcome it so richly deserves. A beautiful glee for male voices, by Walsh, "Where is the smile," was a rare treat, and Mr. Hemsley's singing of the incidental solo was highly effective. Dr. Stewart's appropriate and artistic arrangement of "The Bells of St. Michael's Tower" was one of the triumphs of the night. But beyond all question the most glorious singing throughout the evening was in Dr. S. Wesley's unsurpassable glee, "When fierce conflicting passions." It is a noble composition, and as sung by the Union, would have been ample compensation for any inconvenience which the concert might have cost. It was listened to with unbroken attention, and at its close the accomplished artists were rewarded with grateful applause. Several songs were also given with much success, and Madlle. Gayrard's pianoforte performance was an interesting feature in the selection.

Edgbaston.—On the 27th Feb. the first of two lectures on the "Philosophy of Song" was delivered by Mr. Charles Lunn, at the Plough and Harrow Hotel, Hagley Road. The lecturer combated, in a very clear and logical fashion, the prevailing musical fallacies of the age, and urged the necessity, in the first place, of a truer musical nomenclature. He complained that the art of singing, as followed, and as approved by the public, was a puerile art as contrasted with that of oratory; and that the teachers of it placed their system of instruction on a basis of servile imitation. All true art was deceptive, as based upon falsehood, and depended upon the aptness of its falsehood for its truth. The point at issue between the lecturer and the public was as to where the deception began. Towards the close of his address, the speaker illustrated his system of music by singing passages of various songs in different ways, and by pointing out the wide difference which could be made in the meaning of one passage by varieties of phrasing.

Edinburgh.—An open lecture, with vocal illustrations, on "The Madrigal Period in Italy," was given by Professor Oakeley in the Music Class-room, on Saturday afternoon, the 11th ult., to students and others interested in the subject. There was a large and attentive audience, whose repeated applause showed their appreciation of the lecturer's remarks. A small choir, drawn from the Edinburgh Choral Union and that of St. Paul's Church, York place, sang the vocal illustrations under the direction of Mr. Adam Hamilton. The madrigals were admirably rendered and loudly applauded—those by Marenzio ("Lady see on ev'ry side") and Festa ("Soon as I careless strayed") being, if anything, most favourably received. The other specimens were "Ye Nightingales" (Di Lasso), "When flowing meadows" (Palestrina), and "When all alone" (Converso).——Professor Oakeley gave an organ Recital on the 21st ult., in the music class room. Being the anniversary of the birth of the composer Bach, who was born March 21, 1685, Professor Oakeley gave an account of some of the most interesting facts in his life. Miss Armstrong sang with much effect Bach's aria, "Mein Glaubiges Herze," and Tennyson's Bugle Song, set to music by Professor Oakeley. The programme was highly interesting, and was listened to with much attention.

Golcar.—A highly successful musical festival was held on Tuesday evening, the 28th Feb., in the New Baptist Chapel, on which occasion the Golcar Choral Society and the Baptist Chapel Choir united in giving selections from Handel's Messiah and Redemption. The band and chorus, whose strength was augmented by members of the Huddersfield and other neighbouring choral Societies, consisted of nearly eighty performers, ably conducted by Mr. H. Pearson, organist of the Slaithwaite Church. The singers were accompanied on the organ by Mr. J. E. Pearson, organist of Holy Trinity Church, Huddersfield. The execution of every piece in the programme gave the utmost satisfaction to a large audience. At the conclusion of the performance, a collection was made, which realised the sum of £18 13s. 6d. Jonas Craven, Esq., the president of the Choral Society, who had occupied the chair, returned thanks for the support which the public had extended to the Society. After paying all expenses, the committee have been able to present £5 each to the Golcar Choral Society and the Baptist Chapel Choir, as the proceeds of the festival.

Glasgow.—An audience quite filling the City Hall in all parts, assembled on the 22nd February, at a grand concert given under the auspices of the Choral Union. The concert opened with Gounod's Anthem, "Send out Thy light," followed by selections from Rossini's Stabat Mater, and Mendelssohn's Hear my Prayer, the rest of the programme being composed of secular music. Mdlle. Titiens met with a cordial reception. She sang the solos in Mendelssohn's motett and Rossini's "Inflammatus," with much effect and was equally successful in the well-known Cavatina, "Roberto," with harp accompaniment by Mdlle. Louise Jansen. Mdlle. Sinico, also a favourite in Glasgow, was not less warmly greeted, her principal air "Di Placer," being heartily applauded. Mdlle. Cecile Fernandez made her first appearance, if we mistake not, in Glasgow. She possesses an excellent mezzo-soprano voice, and sings with considerable grace and finish. Signor Vizzani likewise came before a Glasgow audience for the first time, and created a favourable impression. Signori Foli and Ciampi sang excellently throughout the evening, and were much applauded. In the course of the concert Mdlle. Jansen played a fantasia on the harp, exhibiting both purity of tone and delicacy of touch. The concert was thoroughly successful.——The Vocal Association connected with the Queen's Park W.P. Church, gave its fourth annual concert on Thursday evening, the 2nd ult. The programme included Haydn's First Mass (in B flat), three choruses, and two solos from Handel, two selections from Molique's Abraham, (supposed to have been sung on this occasion for the first time in Scotland), and an Anthem of considerable merit by one of the members of the choir. The choral numbers in Haydn's Mass were well executed. The "Gloria," "Quoniam," and "Credo" were given with great spirit and the magnificent "Amen" in the second of these was executed with an exactness and care in the highest degree creditable to the Society. An amateur orchestra of thirty performers lent most efficient aid. The Handellian choruses were capitally rendered, and the trio "Let all those rejoice" from Abraham was excellently sung. "Angels ever bright and fair" was given by Miss Manson, the leading soprano of the choir, with intelligence and care, and "Why do the nations" by Mr. M'Donald, was also highly effective. Mr. David Pentland, to whom the success of the concert is wholly due, conducted with his usual ability and judgment. The church was crowded.

Halifax.—The public performance given by the Philharmonic Society, on Tuesday the 14th ult. in the Mechanics' Hall, attracted a large audience. Cherubini's overture, Les Deux Journées, the second movement and finale from Mozart's Quintette for clarionet and strings, and violoncello (the executors being Herr Grosse, Mr. H. C. Cooper, Mr. Isles, Mr. Bowling, and Mr. Awlson), the symphony in D, by Haydn, containing what is known as the "clock movement," Rossini's overture to William Tell, "The Pilgrims' March," from Mendelssohn's Italian symphony, and a duet for clarionet and bassoon, on various operatic melodies, were the principal instrumental pieces. Songs were given by Miss Helena Walker (one with a violin obbligato, excellently played by Mr. H. C. Cooper), all of which were well received. Mr. W. H. Whitaker was the conductor. As regards excellence of performance this was, we believe, the best concert ever given in Halifax, and the Society may be congratulated on its sustained success.

Harrogate.—On Thursday evening, the 23rd ult., a performance of Haydn's Creation was given in the Congregational Church, the principals being, Miss Blanche Reives, of London (soprano), Mr. Sewell, of Knaresborough (tenor) and Mr. Ratcliffe, of Leeds (bass). Mr. Sam. Iles conducted, and Mr. Matthew Arnold presided at the organ with much ability.

Hillhouse.—On Thursday, the 23rd February, Mr. Joel Mellor gave his annual concert in the Congregational Schools, before a large audience. The artists were Miss Smythe, Miss Berry, Messrs. L. Schofield, J. Mellor, J. Varley and Archibald Ramsden; Mr. J. Wood presiding at the pianoforte and Mr. J. Marshall at the harmonium. The first part of the programme commenced with the quartet, "Lo the early beam of morning." Mr. Ramsden, Miss Smythe, Mr. Mellor, Mr. Schofield and Mr. Varley were highly applauded in their vocal solos, and Miss Smythe and Miss Berry were encored in the duet "The lover and the bird." The concert was in every respect thoroughly successful.

Hull.—On Thursday evening, the 16th ult., Handel's Messiah with some few omissions, was performed in South-street Chapel by a number of amateurs. Miss Foreman was highly successful in the air "I know that my Redeemer liveth," and Mrs. Levett was effective in the air, "He shall feed." The other two soloists were comparatively beginners—Miss Swinchatt and Mr. Whitehead. The first-named has a contralto voice of excellent quality, and sang "He was despised," in a very praiseworthy style. Mr. Whitehead wants experience, but he was successful in some of his solos. The two first pieces which were allotted to him—"But who may abide," and "The people that walked in darkness," with the preceding recitatives, were sung well, but his most creditable solo was "Why do the nations." The orchestra has much improved since the last performance, and was efficiently led by Mr. Edwin Winter. Mr. Vincent Bregazzi was the conductor, to whom, and his assistants, a vote of thanks was proposed by the Rev. L. B. Brown, the pastor, at the conclusion of the performance.——On the 8th ult., a concert was given in the Protestant Hall, Kingston Square, for the benefit of the distressed French. The entertainment was arranged by Mr. Hewitt, French Vice-Consul, whose daughters took an active part in the performance. Mons. Kartog's playing on the violin was very much admired, and a pianoforte duet by Mrs. J. F. Norwood and Mdlle. Dammien was also highly successful. The performance of Weber's "Mouvement Perpetuel," by Madlle. Dammien, created a marked effect upon the audience, and she was enthusiastically applauded. Mrs. Sleddon and Captain Gwyther contributed some vocal solos, and were well received. We hope the success of this concert will advance music in Hull, and stimulate the inhabitants to new endeavours.

Knaresborough.—On Tuesday evening, the 21st ult., a concert was given in the Town Hall by Mr. Mark Pearson, in honour of the Royal Wedding. The principal vocalists were Miss Hattie Hargreaves, Messrs. Longbottom, Sewell, Benson, and Pearson; solo violin Mr. S. Iles; Solo pianoforte, Mr. M. Arnold. The performance was highly successful.

Leamington.—Mr. C. Sydney Vinning gave a pianoforte and organ-harmonium Recital on the afternoon of the 24th February, at the Regent Hotel, under distinguished patronage. The room was full, and the audience appeared highly gratified. Amongst the pianoforte music played, were Haydn's Sonata, in E♭ and Thalberg's Tarantelle. The organ performance comprised, Bach's Fugue, in E♭, two Andantes, an arrangement of Costa's "Triumphal March," by Mr. Vinning, and an Air, with variations, by Hesse.—— Mr. Edwin Aspa's amateur morning concert was given on Saturday the 11th ult., before a large and fashionable audience. The principal piece in the programme was the concert-giver's Pastoral, Endymion, which was performed for the first time, and achieved a decided success. The local papers speak in the highest terms of the music, and affirm that both the solos and concerted pieces evince much melodic beauty. Miss Flint was received with much applause in the part of Selené, and a scena was unanimously re-demanded. The performers engaged in the concert were all amateurs, and they did their best to do justice to the music allotted to them. The opening chorus "Shepherds and maidens, awake, arise!" the chorus for male voices, "With bugle blowing," and the chorus of spirits, "He sleeps, and the roses are sleeping beside him," were especially effective. The portions of the poem not set to music were gracefully read by the author, Mr. Vincent Amcotts. The second part of the concert contained a miscellaneous selection, and included several vocal solos by Mrs. H. Bowyer, Miss Scholes, Mrs. G. Unett, Miss Flint, Messrs. J. Avery and A. Grenfell; a pianoforte piece well played by Miss Stuart, and Mr. Edwin Aspa's Cantata, The Gipsies, which was most favourably received.

Leeds.—A very successful concert was given in the Victoria Hall on Saturday, the 25th February, by the Leeds Amateur Vocal Association, assisted by Miss Pattie Hargreaves, and the band of the 5th Dragoon Guards, in aid of the funds of the Leeds General Infirmary. Miss Hargreaves gave Linley's "Welcome my bonnie lad" and Balfe's "I'm a merry Zingara," with good taste and expression, the former being warmly encored. The members of the Association sang several favourite glees and part songs, and ably sustained their reputation. The most successful was De Rille's part-song, "The Retreat," which was encored. Mr. Dodds, the able conductor of the Society, sang "Hark! the clarion," from Balfe's Rose of Castile, with spirit; and Mr. Atkinson displayed great vigour in "Let me like a soldier fall," which was re-demanded. The duet, "Love and war," by the last-named gentleman and Mr. Cook, was also well sung. The band under the talented conductor, Mr. J. Sidney Jones, added very greatly to the merit of the concert; the overture to Rossini's Stabat Mater, and a selection from Don Giovanni, being played. Julien's "Royal Irish Quadrilles," and the Nightingale Valse, with Corporal McCain's excellent piccolo solo, were also much applauded. Mr. Tom Dodds played the pianoforte accompaniments with his usual ability. During the evening the gratifying announcement was made by Mr. Bellchambers, the hon. treasurer to the Association, that there would be a surplus of at least £50 to be handed over to the Infirmary.——One of the largest concert audiences yet seen in the Leeds Town Hall assembled on Saturday, the 18th ult., when the Madrigal and Motett Society occupied the orchestra. The first part of the concert comprised sacred pieces, and included Handel's duet, "O lovely peace," well sung by Miss Blakeley and Miss Anyon. Dr. Spark's Easter Anthem was admirably performed, Miss Newell singing the solo with much taste and feet. The wedding music, given in honour of the royal marriage, included Benedict's "Wedding Chorus" from St. Cecilia, a song composed by Mrs. Dodds, and effectively given by Miss Hiles; Mendelssohn's Wedding March, spiritedly played by Dr. Spark, and greatly applauded; a new Festal part-song, by the Doctor, "Merrily the bells ring out," and several other pieces more or less appropriate to the occasion. The concert concluded with "The Marseillaise," "The Rhine Watch," and "Rule Britannia", the singing of which produced great excitement.

Liverpool.—The Fourth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society for the present season, took place on the 7th ult. and was devoted to an excellent performance of Samson. The choruses went well, particularly those of the more solemn and dignified character. "Then round about the starry throne" was magnificently sung. The solo performers were Madame Rudersdorff, Madame Viardot, Mr. Raynham and Mr. Santley. Madame Rudersdorff, roused the audience to enthusiasm by the fire and brilliancy with which she sang "Let the bright Seraphim"; and the trumpet obbligato was played to perfection by Mr. Thomas Harper. Madame Viardot was evidently suffering from severe indisposition; but her declamatory power in her recitatives, and her intense feeling in "Return O God of hosts" and "Ye sons of Israel now lament," amply proved that she was fully equal to the task allotted to her. Mr. Raynham sang with great expression; his "Total Eclipse" especially being deeply pathetic. Mr. Santley gave proof of the variety of his styles in an equally excellent rendering of the entirely opposite characters of the giant Harapha and Manoah, the aged father of Samson. The audience could not be restrained from a re-demand of his last song "How willing my paternal love," which was admirably sung.——The fourth and last of the present series of performances on the plan of the London "Monday Popular Concerts," took place in the Philharmonic Hall, on Wednesday the 15th ult., the executants being Herren Joachim and L. Ries; Mr. Zerbini and Signor Piatti, for the stringed quartett; solo pianoforte, Madame Schumann; vocalist, Madame Florence Lancia; accompanist, Mr. Zerbini. The programme stood thus: Quartet for strings, Mendelssohn in E flat, No. 3. (Scherzo, encored); Song (Handel) "Let me wander, not unseen"; Sonata, in A major, (Herr Joachim) for violin with pianoforte accompaniment, Handel, (Allegro, encored); Aria (Mozart) "Voi che sapete," (encored); Novelette (Schumann) in F major, op. 21, for pianoforte alone; Impromptu "Zur guitarre" (encored) and replaced by Mendelssohn's so-called "Bee's Wedding;" Sonata, in F, op. 24 for pianoforte and violin (Beethoven), Madame Schumann and Herr Joachim, (Scherzo, encored); Song (Benedict) "I'm alone"; Quartet, in D major, op. 64, No. 11, for strings (Haydn). The concert was much appreciated by a crowded audience.—The fifth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 21st ult., and was mainly devoted to Sacred Music. The solo artists were Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley. The most interesting feature of the evening was the performance of M. Gounod's "Gentian Mass," conducted by the composer, whose reception was enthusiastic. The Mass went well, with the exception of some uncertainty in the vocal intonation—perhaps in consequence of the difference of pitch, which seemed to be slightly lowered, to suit that of the organ. (It would be well if this were the habitual pitch.) The orchestral works were Weber's "Jubilee" Overture; Spohr's little known but beautiful "Concert Overture," Op. 126; Sinfonia to Joseph, C. E. Horsley," and Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," in compliment, of course, to the Princess Louise. Two miscellaneous choruses in the second part "When His loud voice Jephtha, and the Hallelujah in the Mount of Olives (Beethoven) went steadily. The solos were well received, especially Mr. Santley's fine singing of Pergolesi's "Sanctum et terribile" and Madame Patey's delicate rendering of the "Evening Prayer" from Eli. This lady was, besides, encored in Gounod's new Sacred Song, "There is a green hill far away."

Longridge.—A concert was given in connection with the Longridge Working Men's Club on Saturday evening, the 11th ult., in the Boys' School. The vocalists were Mr. J. Edelston's choir of boys and men. Mr. T. Woolman ably presided at the pianoforte. The programme consisted of glees, part songs, &c., interspersed with occasional pianoforte solos, songs, and other pieces. Master P. Edelston (only eight years of age) played a fantasia so well as to call forth special admiration, and Mr. T. Woolman performed a Rondo of Weber's with much skill. During the interval between the parts, Mr. Edelston gave an explanation of the principles of tonic sol-fa notation, and before concluding he succeeded in getting the whole company to sing under his direction a short piece. There was a large attendance, the gathering being presided over by Mr. Owtram, President of the Club. After the concert the Rev. W. C. Bache, vicar, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Edelston and his associates, and also spoke in eulogistic terms of the manner in which Mr. Edelston had explained the principles of the system he practised. The votes having been duly accorded and acknowledged, the proceedings terminated.

Manchester.—At Mr. Hallé's Seventeenth Concert, on the 16th February, Benedict's new Oratorio, St. Peter, was given, with Madlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Mr. Santley as principal vocalists. Mr. Henry Walker presided at the organ and Mr. Hallé conducted. This composition may be said to be the novelty of the season, and drew an immense audience. The applause which greeted the conclusion of each "number" of the work testified to its excellence. More particularly may be noticed, Air "O house of Jacob" (Mr. Vernon Rigby), Air "How great, O Lord, is Thy goodness" (Mr. Santley), Orchestral Interlude «Evening prayer and rising of the storm) with Recit "But the ship was now in the midst of the sea" (Madame Patey), Chorus "The deep uttereth his voice" and Air (Madlle. Titiens) and Chorus "The Lord hath His way in the whirlwind and the storm," Quartet (by the principals) "O come let us sing unto the Lord," Air "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted" (Madame Patey), Air "O that my head were waters" (Mr. Santley) and Air "I mourn as a dove" (Madlle. Titiens). Of the choruses the following were the most effective: the opening chorus "They that go down to the sea," "The Lord be a lamp unto thy feet," "Of a truth Thou art the Son of God," "Dead March with chorus of Jews," "Thou that destroyest the temple," and chorus of disciples, "He is like a lamb that is brought to the slaughter," "He will swallow up death in victory" and the last chorus "Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His. Amen."——A successful Concert was given on the 18th February, in the Free Trade Hall with the following artists: Vocalists, Mesdlle. Titiens, Sinico, Cecile Fernandez, Signori Vizzani, Foli and Ciampi; solo harp, Mdlle. Louise Jansen; solo pianoforte, Mr. Edwd. Hecht. Signor Bevignani was conductor and accompanist.——Mr. Hallé's Eighteenth Concert was given on the 23rd February, with Mdlle. Enriquez, Herr Joachim and Mr. Hallé as principals, the only novelty being Professor Sterndale Bennett's Overture "The Naiades."——On Monday the 13th ult., the Temple Choral Society gave a performance of Haydn's Creation, to a large audience, in the Hulme Town Hall. The principal vocalists were Miss Morgan, Mr. Grimshaw and Mr. Humphreys (members of the Society.) Miss Morgan sang the whole of the soprano solos, &c., with much effect, and was encored in the songs "With verdure clad" and "On mighty pens." Mr. Grimshaw received enthusiastic applause for his rendering of "In native worth," and Mr. Humphreys (who was evidently suffering from cold,) also made a good impression in "Rolling in foaming billows" and "Now heaven in fullest glory." The name of Herr Otto Bernhardt, as leader of the band, is sufficient guarantee for the manner in which the instrumental portion was performed. The choir also reflected the utmost credit upon the conductor, Mr. Smith.

Monkwearmouth.—On the 17th ult. a concert of vocal music was given in the Workmen's Hall, the artists being Miss E. Tomsett, Mr. Gent, Mr. Whitehead (of Durham Cathedral), Mr. R. Ferry, and Mr. Angelo Forrest, accompanist. All the pieces were highly successful, and the applause was most enthusiastic; "I've wandered in dreams," by Miss Tomsett and Mr. Whitehead, being especially well received. Mr. Forrest fully sustained his reputation as an accomplished pianist, and his accompaniments, particularly to the part-music, added much to the general effect.

Montreal.—On the 20th February an organ Recital was given by Mr. George F. Le Jeune, organist of St. George's Church. The programme was eminently calculated, not only to show forth the various combinations of the new instrument, but also to test the capabilities of the most experienced organist. Mr. Le Jeune's performance gave evidence of sound culture and indefatigable practice. His rendering of the difficult Sonata No. 2, C minor, of Mendelssohn, as also of the air, "If with all your hearts ye truly seek Me," from the same composer's Elijah, was especially good. The whole of the selection was listened to with the utmost interest.

Newport, Salop.—On Wednesday evening, the 1st ult., the Newport Choral Society gave an evening concert to a very appreciative audience, in the Town Hall. The first part was from Judas Maccabæus, and the second from The Messiah. Miss Rachel Farrar (soprano), of the London Academy of Music, was engaged to take the principal solos, which were sung with great taste and judgment, especially "From mighty kings" and "I know that my Redeemer liveth." The choruses throughout were rendered with much precision and spirit. Mr. Smart, organist of the Parish Church, conducted.

Nottingham.—The fourth of the Monday Popular Concerts was given at the Mechanics' Institution on the 27th February, when a very excellent programme was provided. An interesting feature in the selection was Mr. Henry Farmer's performance of Mendelssohn's violin concerto, which is reported by the local papers to have been highly satisfactory. Unfortunately Madame Patey was taken ill after singing her first song, and Gounod's sacred song "There is a green hill far away," which was to have been given for the first time, was omitted. Weber's Polacca, in E, was brilliantly performed on the pianoforte; and amongst the concerted instrumental pieces were a Trio by Fesca, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, and Mendelssohn's Quintet, in B flat, (No. 2, Op. 87), for two violins, two violas and violoncello.

Oldham.—On the 22nd, February Handel's Oratorio, The Messiah, was given in the Working-man's Hall, before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland, Miss Heywood, Mr. Henry Taylor and Mr. Alfred Wroe. The orchestra consisted of the band of the theatre, assisted by local instrumentalists; and the members of the chorus were selected from the various choirs and musical Societies in the neighbourhood. Miss Clelland was especially effective in "Rejoice greatly," and "I know that my Redeemer liveth," the contralto solos were well sung by Miss Heywood, and Messrs. Taylor and Wroe were fairly efficient in the trying music allotted to them. The choruses were given with commendable precision, the "Hallelujah," being perhaps the most successful. Mr. Wilkinson conducted with decision and intelligence, and Master Fred. Pass presided at the harmonium.

Pembroke Dock.—On the 21st ult. an amateur concert in aid of the fund for renovating the interior of St. John's Church, was given in the Temperance Hall with the most gratifying results. The programme was excellently selected to meet the taste of a mixed audience. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Gwynne Harries, Mrs. W. Taylor, Messrs. Blake, Stinchcombe and Powell, all of whom were highly effective in the solos allotted to them. Mrs. Taylor receiving an encore for two of her songs, and Mrs. Gwynne Harries creating a perfect furore by her excellent execution of the valse "L'Ardita," which was re-demanded with a storm of applause. Mrs. Harries's fine soprano voice was also heard to great advantage in Barnett's trio, "This magic wove scarf," in which piece she was ably supported by Messrs. Blake and Stinchcombe. Pianoforte solos were played with marked success by Mrs. Ayling and Mrs. Gwynne Harries, and a word of commendation must be given to Miss Fanny Potter, the talented young organist of the church, who lent most valuable assistance in some of the part-music, and also accompanied with much taste and judgment. The arrangements of the concert were carried out by the churchwardens, Dr. Gwynne Harries and Mr. Allen Long, to whom too much praise cannot be awarded for the excellent manner in which everything was managed.

Philadelphia.—The public rehearsals of the "Germania Orchestra," under the management of Mr. A. G. Emerick, and conducted by Carl Sentz, have commenced at the Musical Fund Hall, with every prospect of success. The programme of the first performance, which has been forwarded to us, contains a very interesting selection, including Liszt's descriptive Symphony, "Les Preludes."

Rochdale.—The members of the Rochdale Choral Union performed Handel's Judas Maccabæus, at the Public Hall on Wednesday evening, the 1st ult. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland, of Manchester (in lieu of Miss Manfrey, who was unable to attend, owing to an attack of bronchitis), Miss Harlow, of London, Mr. Preston, the blind tenor, and Mr. Varley, bass. Mr. Lofthouse was the leader; Mr. Thomas presided at the harmonium, and Mr. Hurst officiated as conductor. The band was considerably augmented for the occasion. Mr Varley threw much feeling into his rendering of "I feel the Deity;" and Miss Clelland and Miss Harlow were highly effective in the duet "Come ever smiling." Miss Clelland was much applauded in the air "From mighty kings," and Mr. Preston, in the air "How vain is man" in the second part, was enthusiastically encored. The choruses on the whole were well given. We may especially mention "Father whose almighty power," "Disdainful of danger," "Hear us, O Lord," "Ah! wretched Israel"! "We never will bow down," and "See the conquering hero." The Society may fairly be congratulated on the efforts it is making to create and foster a taste for high class music.

Salisbury.—A performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus was given on the 21st ult. by the Sarum Choral Society. The soloists were Miss Lanham, Messrs. Cummings and Brandon, all of whom acquitted themselves in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. The band was, on the whole, efficient, and the entire performance, conducted by Mr. Read, was much appreciated by a numerous audience.

Sheffield.—A Pianoforte Recital was given by Miss Clara Linley, on the 8th ult., in the Music Hall. The programme comprised selections from the important works of Thalberg, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Clementi, with Wehli's "Lurline," Rhenish Song (variations, Ries), and March from Tanhauser (Liszt). The audience much applauded the "Rhenish Song," and an encore being demanded, Miss Linley acceded by giving Chevalier de Kontski's duet from Faust. The performance was thoroughly successful.

St. Helens.—In acknowledgment of the gratuitous services rendered by Mrs. Cole, as organist of the Parish Church, a bracelet was presented to her after the first part of a concert on the 20th February, accompanied by a most complimentary speech from one of the churchwardens, Dr. Chevalier. The gift was manufactured by Messrs. Watherston and Sons, (Pall Mall), and cost £24. It has a raised oval centre of pale blue enamel, in which are set opals and diamonds; on either side of the centre ornament are smaller groupings of a similar character, forming a chaste and beautiful specimen of high-class workmanship.

Stockport.—At a complimentary dinner, under the presidency of the Mayor, given at the George Hotel on Saturday the 11th February, a handsome purse with 200 guineas and an elaborately emblazoned testimonial was presented to Mr. E. J. Edmondson, as an acknowledgment of his labours for the advancement of music, as well as in appreciation of his artistic abilities. For more than 20 years Mr. Edmondson has been a member of the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club.

Totnes, Devon.—A Society has been formed in this town within the last month, under the name of the "Totnes Harmonic Society," which already numbers almost fifty members. Mr. Bowmaker, of Paignton, is the conductor, and Mr. R. Sparke Distin, professor of music at Totnes, acts as Secretary and Pianist. The Society has our best wishes for its success.

Trowbridge.—A new Oratorio, by Mr. Francis Howell, called The Land of Promise, was produced at Hill's Hall, on the 7th ult., with much success. The principal vocalists were Miss S. Foote, Mr. T. Hill, and Mr. M. Drayton. The local papers speak in high terms of the merits of the work, which we have no doubt will shortly have a hearing in the metropolis. Mr. H. Millington presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Dowdle at the harmonium.

Weybridge.—The members of the Weybridge Vocal Class gave a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus, at the schoolrooms, on the 20th February. Considering the small number of voices engaged in the choruses, and the miniature orchestra—consisting only of two violins, a viola, a violoncello and a contra-basso—the execution of the work was highly satisfactory, and great credit is due to Mr. W. H. Sangster, Mus. Bac., Oxon., for the excellent manner in which he has trained the choir under his direction. All the solos were efficiently rendered by Mrs. H. Barnby, Miss Kellock, Miss M. Francis, Miss J. Francis, Rev. H. Spyers, Rev. H. Francis and Mr. W. Moir. The concert was well attended.

Yateley, Hants.—The popular entertainment of readings and music took place on Tuesday, the 21st ult., and was very well attended, it being the last of the season. It is very gratifying to the committee to state that from the opening of these readings they have always been well attended and supported by the inhabitants of the village, with great success, whereas in the neighbouring villages they have entirely failed. The vocalists were Mrs. Lewin, Miss Wigge, Captain Garland, and Mr. Moberly, all of whom were highly successful, Mrs. Lewin and Miss Wigge each deservedly receiving an encore. A pianoforte duet by Misses Wigge and Wall, and a solo by Mrs. Garland gave great satisfaction.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. F. J. Oliver, Organist and Choirmaster, to Christchurch, Hoxton.——Mr. W. T. Essex, Assistant Organist at Brunswick Chapel, Hyde Park.——Mr. D. C. Browne, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Jude's Church, Liverpool.——Mr. James Henry Fearson to St. John's, Huddersfield.——Mr. A. W. Marchant, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's, Mansfield, Notts.——Mr. H. H. Battley, Organist to the Congregational Church, Upper Norwood.——Mr. R. Stokoe, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Barnabas, Holloway.——Mr. F. Dewberry, to St. Andrew the Great, Cambridge.——Mr. H. T. Bywater, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mark's, Wolverhampton.

DR. SPARK'S EASTER ANTHEM, "Christ being raised from the dead," dedicated to his friend Henry Smart, Esq. Folio, organ score, 3s.; separate parts, 3d. each.
"Just what an Easter Anthem should be—jubilant yet solid in style * * * This very clever Anthem has our hearty commendation."—The Choir.
"The plan of this Anthem is clear and well defined, the subjects are melodious and uncommon, and the harmony throughout is pure and healthy."—The Queen.
"The Anthem is excellent, and its general character devotional and expressive."—The Guardian.
London: Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners-street, W.

BENEDICITE, set to an Ancient Chant, with the old arrangement of the words. Price 2d.
"The Benedicite is often disused because the refrain in every verse makes this Canticle seem tedious to a congregation."

Weippert and Co. (late Simpson), publishers, 266, Regent-street, and all music-sellers.

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.
"* * * * Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services." * * * * they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.
"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Foxle's Musical Journal.
London: Novello, Ewer and Co., or the Composer, Burnley.

Just published, price 5s.

84, NEW BOND STREET,

EXCLUSIVE WHOLESALE AGENTS FOR THE

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS,

Derive that demonstrated superiority which has won for them the avowed preference of the public generally,

NOT ONLY FROM

BETTER SKILL IN CONSTRUCTION

But also in considerable measure from the exclusive use of

Patented Improvements,

AMONG THESE MAY BE NAMED

RESONANT CASES

(Patented June 21st, and August 23rd, 1870).

Adding to the power, richness and purity of tones; being a further development of and improvement in the application of principles previously to some extent understood and used in the construction of such instruments.

Sounding and Tube Boards.

Prepared by a peculiar process on machinery especially constructed for the purpose.

Mason and Hamlin Vox Humana

(Patented July 21, 1869),

Differing from all other Stops of the name, and of peculiar beauty in its effect; being also free from liability to get out of order.

Self-adjusting Centre Pressure Reed Valves

(Patented August 15, 1865),

Securing more perfect and durable action, quicker utterance, and better uniformity of tone.

MASON & HAMLIN OCTAVE COUPLER

(Patented January 3, 1865),

Superor to other Octave Couplers in more perfect action, and freedom from liability to get out of order.

THE

Automatic Bellows Swell

(Patented April 19, 1864),

Greatly the best Swell in existence, producing much more perfect crescendos and diminuendos than are possible with any other, and most conveniently used.

 These are among the more important peculiarities of construction of these instruments, without use of which their makers could not hope to give them all that superiority which has won such a reputation in Europe and America, and secured a sale greatly exceeding that of any other instruments of the class in the world. They therefore invite special attention to the Patented Improvements used exclusively in these instruments, as contributing materially to their acknowledged superiority.

HARMONIUMS! HARMONIUMS!
W. HATTERSLEY, having spent the last Ten Years in improving upon the ordinary Harmonium, has succeeded in bringing out an Instrument, nearly approaching the tone of the Organ; the harsh and reedy tone which has hitherto been so great an objection in other Harmoniums is entirely obviated, and although the Bass is deep, full, and round, yet the Treble is always predominant, and through the careful voicing of the reeds, the articulation is fully equal to that of the Piano.
Lists of PRICES, with testimonials, to be had on application to

A LITERARY LAY-CLERK.

Lay-Clerks, as a rule, do not appear to be given to literary pursuits; for, although it would be unreasonable and unfair to presume that the taste for literature has no existence among them, yet it is certain that utterance is so rarely given to the expression of literary taste, that no original book has been written by any lay member of a cathedral body since that published by Thomas Mace in 1676. There is no lack of intelligence among lay-clerks, neither is there a scarcity of subjects upon which they could speak with authority if the inclination and opportunity existed. The only reason which can be offered as an explanation or justification of this silence lies probably in the fact, that the advantages enjoyed by them as assistants in the performance of Divine Service are such that intellectual pursuits are incompatible and difficult, if not impossible, and the union of an exalted and privileged office with the exercise of high mental powers is neither expected nor desired. It has been thought better to combine the occupation of the unthinking mechanic or tradesman with the duties and functions of the daily performance of prayer and praise, rather than to exhibit those capacities which are held to belong by right to the "dignitates in jurisdictione."

In the time immediately succeeding the Reformation, most of those who held office in the church, whether in holy orders or not, were men of education and refinement; but another element became gradually introduced for reasons, and under circumstances, which it is not expedient at present to discuss, with an effect upon the service of the church which old Thomas Mace thus regrets and laments—"Their yearly wages are in some quires not exceeding eight, ten, or twelve pounds a-year,"—"and how should they be thought otherwise than well-nigh starv'd; were it not for that notable piece of contrivance of the worthy Prelates and Masters of our Churches, who suffer them to work and labour (otherwise) for their necessary livelihoods; some in one calling, and some in another, viz., in the barber's trade, the shoe-maker's trade, the taylor's trade, the smith's trade, and divers other (some) more inferiour trades or professions." "Now I say, these things considered, and likewise to the general dead-heartedness, or zeal-benum'd frozen-affections, towards the encouragement of those things, how can it be imagined that such clerks should be fit and able performers in that duty which necessarily depends upon education, breeding, and skill." These remarks, which unfortunately possess as much point to-day as they probably did 200 years ago, help to the better understanding of the fact why lay-clerks are not literary, and also why a special interest is attached to the work of Mr. Thomas Mace, it being the best known, if not the only work by a lay-clerk.

He calls his book "Musick's Monument; or a remembrancer of the best practical musick, both divine and civil, that has ever been known to have been in the world." As usual in the days in which the book was published, the title-page contains an epitome of the contents of the whole work, which is divided into three parts, "The first part shows a necessity of singing Psalms well, in Parochial Churches, or not to sing at all; directing how they may be well sung, certainly by two several ways or means, with an assurance of a perpetual National Quire, and also shewing how Cathedral musick may be much improved and refined." A consummation devoutly to be wished, even in these times, Master Mace.

The second "treats of the noble lute (the best of instruments) now made easie, with all its occult lock'd-up secrets, plainly laid open," and many matters relating to that now forgotten instrument; while the third part is devoted to "the generous viol, in its rightest use, with some curious observations, never before handled, concerning it, and musick in general." London: printed by T. Ratcliffe and N. Thompson for the Author, and are to be sold by Himself at his house in Cambridge, and by John Carr, at his shop at the Middle-Temple Gate in Fleet Street, 1676.

The style in which the book is written is quaint, homely, and amusing, and with an amount of ingenuousness that gives the most favourable opinion of the writer, in his temper and talents. It is like the pleasant gossiping of a cheery old man, enthusiastic in his art, full of piety and good humour, patient under affliction and misfortune, and anxious to fulfil the purpose for which his work was begun in the most thorough and conscientious manner. The portrait prefixed to his book was taken when he was sixty-three years of age, and shows a face marked with lines indicating past suffering; and so happily has the artist caught the spirit of his expression that the peculiar look generally found upon the faces of deaf persons is admirably preserved.

His book, "Musick's Monument," contains much that is at once amusing, interesting, and instructive, not to speak of the vivid reflection it shadows forth, as well as of the ways and manner of thought and expression of the age in which it was written, as also of that which might with seriousness be called the speaking likeness of its author, so that a description of the book, seasoned with a few extracts from it, may perhaps furnish food for a passing amusement, if not for permanent profitable thought. The particulars of the life of the author that have reached us are very few and meagre, partly inferred from his book, and partly obtained from a handbill issued by him when he came to live in London, a copy of which is preserved in the Bagford collection of odd-printed scraps gathered as a contribution towards a history of the art of printing, now to be found among the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum.

All record of Thomas Mace ceases in 1709, the date when it is said the last payment was made of a portion of his pension from Trinity College, Cambridge, where he held the office of clerk or singing man; so that he must have been at least ninety-six years of age when he ceased to breathe.

This last statement, however, is only conjectural, as positive information of his latter days is somewhat doubtful and cannot be relied upon as accurate.

In his book he speaks of himself "as much a Divine (I mean a Priest and son of the Church) as a Master in musick," but as he does not appear to have been admitted to a degree in the University, or to have taken Holy Orders, his statement must be considered as emanating from one who "magnified his office." Again, it is hardly possible that if he was ordained, he should have been compelled to teach music, as a means of subsistence, when he was seventy-seven years of age, as by that time he would have had many opportunities of obtaining one of the college livings which sometimes descend to the chaplains of such a society, therefore the title which heads this article may be reasonably taken as his proper description.

It is presumed that he was a north-countryman, as much from his description of a service in York Cathedral during the siege in 1644, as from his use of certain words and expressions still peculiar to the north, and also from the fact of having chosen his wife from among the Yorkshire lasses, in preference to marrying one belonging to the home of his adoption, a presumption which certainly gathers power when it is considered how strongly the feeling of love for "Yorkshire vales and Yorkshire maids" exists in the hearts of all belonging to that noble country, even in the present time when class peculiarities are less intense than they were formerly. Again a number of the subscribers to his book belonged to Yorkshire, and he places the names of those subscribers first on the list, "because," as he says, "there I first tendred this business to the Right Honourable John Lord Frescheville, Baron Staveley and Governor of York." This evidence is merely presumptive, and must be taken for as much as it is worth.

In an article on "Clifford's Anthem Book," which recently appeared in the pages of this publication, it was stated that publishing books by subscription was an expedient of later use: it might have been mentioned, also, that it was rendered necessary because the practice of sole patronage had been made the subject of satirical attack, and those possessing means and inclination had foreborne to accept dedications, and therefore authors had been compelled to appeal to the public upon the merits of their works, or their known ability to treat a given subject.

Mace's book was published by subscription, and is among the list of the earliest so popularised. The first book issued by subscription in England being a Polyglot Bible edited by Dr Bryan Walton in 1651. "Musick's Monument" is dedicated to God, and Mace's address begins:

"To Thee one-only-oneness, I direct my weak desires and works; please to protect Both them and Me."

The cause before hinted at, may be the reason for so many Yorkshire patrons, and a long life spent in Cambridge would probably make many inclined to help him in his venture, and as most of his London subscribers were men belonging to the several Inns of Court, they were doubtless old Cambridge acquaintances or pupils. The names of the few musicians that are to be found in the subscription list, amounting in all to seven, include those of Robert Wilson, Thomas Tudway, Francis Crispe, Thomas and John Lawes, Jeremie Forcer, and James Hart, very few of whom attained eminence in the art of which Mace describes them as masters. Mr. Robert Wilson must not be confounded with Dr. John Wilson, who died three years before the work was printed; William Lawes was killed at Chester in 1645, and Henry died in 1662, so that the two subscribers above named could not have been the famous musicians. Dr. Thomas Tudway afterwards professor of Music in the University of Cambridge was organist at King's College Chapel when the book was published, and James Hart was a gentleman of the Chapel Royal at the time, but no information concerning the others can be obtained. Of the remaining patrons of the book, many of whom were eminent men, it is not necessary to speak, but of the book itself there is much to be said, and something to be learned, and as the diction of the author is quaint and peculiar, his own words will possess a greater charm for the reader than any modern substitutions. He devotes the first chapters of his book to a series of directions and instructions as to the improvement of singing Psalms in churches, concerning which matter he says, that "I will not deliver my opinion, but my practical experience, knowledge, and judgment, both according to the rules of reason, and above fifty years experience and practice in the art of singing." He speaks of the difficulty of even cultivated voices being able, without instrumental aid, to maintain the pitch, and of the necessity of having skilled singers to lead the service; for "If such absolute voices as I have made mention of shall be thus uncertain of singing in tune, &c., what shall the unskilfull-inharmonious-coarse-grained-harsh voice be able to do." The manner in which he connects words together to convey the idea of forcible expression, is much after the modern German use; and, as in the instance quoted above, is somewhat strange, but there are many examples in the course of the work equally striking and amusing; for example, in his direction "how to procure an organist," his use of the chain of words, "harmless-innocent-delight-of-pure-and-undefilable-practices" is peculiar, if redundant. Some of his directions are as uncommon as much for their foresight as for the choice of expressions; thus, when he suggests how that Psalms may be performed in Churches without an organ, "for there are many who boggle at the very name," by encouraging parents to have their children taught to sing "one hour a-day, or one half-day in the week at least." He thus anticipated the system proposed by Mainzer, and followed by Hullah, by two hundred years; and, he adds, "if such a general course were determined upon throughout the nation, there would scarcely be a schoolmaster but would, or might be easily able himself to do the business,"—"and thus," according to his scheme, "as your organists would grow up amongst you as your corn grows in your fields, so now would your quiresters increase even unto swarms like your bees in your gardens." That Mr. Mace's advice has not been acted upon any cathedral choirmaster can readily vouch for.

In his remarks on Cathedral music he complains of the inefficient and miserable condition of the Church service in his time, and of the "poor-drudging-clerks of quires," who only received the "old nominated-statutable-wages" which offered no temptations to men of skill, and necessitated the performance of the duty by "inferiour men," who had no prospect of a better salary, "for those who list not to sing (as generally most of them do) so or so, for so much, may go whistle if they will, for they are like to get no more, there being no other provision (as 'tis said) left, by the precise words of the statutes (a sad case indeed, in these miserable-hard-dear-griping-times!)"

Whether this matter has been improved or not is a question for those to solve who are best acquainted with the usages of cathedrals in the present day.

Apropos of this subject he gives "a notable story of a confident ignorant clark," which is highly entertaining. This "great-jolly-boon-fellow" committed some gross absurdity in the service by reason of his—

"Great-dunstical insufficiency in singing of an anthem alone in which he was so notoriously and ridiculously out, as caused all or most of the young people then present, to burst out laughing, to the great blemish of the Church service and the dishonour of God (at that time and in that place).

"But thus it fell out (in short) viz., that after the angry Dean had ruffled him soundly in very smart language, so that he thought that he had given him shame enough for his insufficiency and duncery; how think ye that this blade came off?

"Why, most notably, and in such a manner as made all the standers by wonder and admire him, venting himself in these very words (for I myself was both an eye and an ear witness), with a most stern, angry countenance, and a vehement rattling voice, even so as he made the church ring withal, saying, 'Sir-r-r (shaking his head), I'd ha' you know I sing after the rate of so much a-year (naming his wages), and except ye mend my wages, I am resolved never to sing better while I live.'"

After commenting upon this "nicking piece of shrewd wit," he offers a few hints as to the best means of improving the Cathedral service, but as these hints turn upon the point of enlarging the stipends of the clerks, it can be easily understood that his suggestions are impracticable.

It is curious to note how, even in small matters, history repeats itself.

Each part of the work is introduced, and concluded, with a piece of rhyming of Mace's own composition, descriptive of the subjects of the divisions of the book, the style of which, although clear and well-measured, is not sufficiently original to entitle the author to a place in the ranks of English poets, but the great amount of valuable information so freely imparted forms a mine of wealth to the historian of music and manners, and the singularities of the style make the book interesting to the student to whom manner is better understood, or of more importance than matter.

Thomas Mace seems to have suffered the lot of poverty in his old age, as well as the less skilful members of the class to which he belonged, as the following announcement, before referred to, implies. This bill is an admirable epitome of his style, and will be read with interest; he had probably chosen his lodging either to be near his publisher, or the few old Cambridge friends who might have been left to him, when finding the infirmities of age creeping upon him, and, perhaps, being free from duty at his College from the same cause, he came to London for the purpose mentioned in the following

ADVERTISEMENT.

To all lovers of the best sort of Musick.

Men say the times are strange, 'tis true,
'Cause, many strange things hap to be;
Let it not then seem strange to you
That here one strange thing more you see.

That is in Devereux Court, near the Grecian Coffee-house, at the Temple-back gate, there is a deaf person teacheth Musick to perfection, who by reason of his great age, viz., 77, is come to town with his whole stock of musical furniture, v. instruments and books to put off, to whomsoever delights in such choice things; for he hath nothing light and vain; but all substantial and solid Musick: some particulars do here follow:

1. There is a late invented ORGAN which (for private use) excels all other fashioned organs whatever, and for which substantial artificial reasons will be given, and (for its beauty) it may become a nobleman's dining-room.

2. There belongs to it a pair of large-siz'd consort-viols, chiefly fitted and suited for that or consort use; and 'tis great pity they should be parted.

3. There is a Pedal Harpsicon (the absolute best sort of consort harpsicon that has been invented) there being in it more than 20 curieties, most of them to come in with the foot of the player, without the least hindrance of play (exceedingly pleasant) and

4. Is a single harpsicon.

5. A new invented instrument called a Dyphone, v. a double lute, it is both theorbo and French lute compleat; and as easy to play upon as any other lute.

6. Several other Theorbos, lutes, and viols, very good.

7. Great store of choice collections of the works of the most famous composers that have lived in these last 100 years, as Latin, English, Italian, and some French.

8. There is the publisher's own Musick's Monument, some few copies thereof he hath still by him to put off, it being a subscribed book, and not exposed to common sale. All these will be sold at very easy rates, for the reason aforesaid, and because (indeed) he cannot stay in town longer than 4 months (exactly). He further adds, if any be desirous to partake of his experimental skill in this high-noble-art, during his stay in town, he is ready to assist them; and (haply) they may obtain that from him which they may not meet withal elsewhere.

He teacheth these five things, v. theorbo, the French lute and the viol, in all their excellent ways and uses, as also composition, together with the knack of procuring invention to young composers, (the general and greatest difficulty they meet withal) this last thing not being attempted by any author (as he knows of) yet may be done; though some has been so wise (or otherwise) to contradict it.

"Sed experientia docuit"

Any of these five things may be learned so understandingly in this little time he stays (by such general rules as he gives together with Musick's Monument written principally to such purposes) as that any aptly inclined, may (for the future) teach themselves without any other help.

If any bookseller (or other) will deal for the whole Parcel of Musick's Monument, they shall have them at considerable advantage for themselves to gain by.

The several portions of Mace's book are worth separate treatment, but enough has been quoted to serve the present purpose, and to show his claim to the title of a literary lay-clerk, and there is also sufficient reason in the few particulars of his history which are given to account in some measure for the absence of followers his example has made, for it is better to believe that the abstinence from literary pursuits among the body arises more from "a modest-shy-shame-faced-reticence (so to speak)" than from any "great dunsticall-insufficiency."

MENDELSSOHN'S "HEAR MY PRAYER."

THE original manuscript of this beautiful composition, with the letter which accompanied it to this country, have been lately presented by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew to the South Kensington Museum; they are in the Fine Arts Court, near Handel's Harpsichord.

In the third volume of Lady Wallace's Reminiscences of Mendelssohn, the following account is given respecting this work.

"Some Sacred Concerts being held in London under the direction of Miss Mounsey (now Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew), Mr. Bartholomew wrote to request Dr. Mendelssohn to compose something for one of those performances, taking the words from Scripture, or from either of the three accompanying sets of verses. Mendelssohn selected one of those, 'Hear my prayer,' and this composition (now held in such high esteem in this country) was transmitted with the following gratifying letter in English to Mr. Bartholomew."

Berlin, Jan. 31, 1844.

MY DEAR SIR,—I send you the sacred solo which you wanted me to write for your Concerts at Crosby Hall, and beg you will keep the manuscript as a token of my sincere gratitude and respect. You have often been very kind to me, that I am almost ashamed of the trifle I offer in return; however, I have nothing better, and so you must "take the will for the deed." It is a little after the time you fixed me for sending the music, but I hope as you receive it in February, that it will yet be in time for the last Concert at least.

I have only to observe that the bass of the organ accompaniment is always meant to be played either with the pedals, or with the lower octave in the left hand, which I never wrote in it.

Be as healthy and as happy as I always wish you to be; and remember kindly.

Yours very truly,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

BACH'S PASSION-MUSIC AT WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The introduction of this sublime work into the special service in Westminster Abbey on Maunday Thursday revealed, for the first time in England, the true intent of the composition; for as Bach in all the music he wrote for the church, used the gifts of his Creator solely for the glorification of his religion, it is only in a sacred edifice that these fervent outpourings of his faith can be truly judged. The Passion-music is purely a religious service; and although the wondrous power displayed in it must be felt by every hearer, whatever may be its surroundings, the solemnity of the subject can only be fully appreciated where the mind has been previously disposed rather to devotion than enjoyment.

No words can express the effect produced by the vast body of choristers, more especially in the Lutheran chorales (which were unaccompanied); and were there any latent feeling that the congregation had assembled more for active pleasure than for calm worship, the reverential demeanour of all upon whom the eye accidentally fell must have been a convincing proof how much the impressive words of sacred writ had been deepened by the sympathetic genius of Bach. The choruses were finely given by a choir of about three hundred, including the male members of Mr. Barnby's choir and many choristers from the Abbey, the Chapel Royal, the Temple Church, Windsor, Eton, &c., all of whom were surpliced. The soprano and contralto solos were sung with good expression by Master Hildersley, of the Temple, and Master Coward, of the Chapel Royal. Master Coward had a difficult task in giving due effect to so exacting a solo as "Alas, now is my Saviour gone," but his reading of the air was in the highest degree commendable; and Master Hildersley, in the equally trying "Have mercy upon me O Lord" (with the excellent violin obbligato of Mr Pollitzer), produced an effect scarcely to be expected from one so young, and, as we should imagine, inexperienced in the severe music of Bach. Mr. Cummings and Mr. Lewis Thomas gave the tenor and bass solos in their accustomed excellent style, the former delivering the phrase "And he went out and wept bitterly" with a pathos which spoke to the hearts of all. The instrumentalists, like the choralists, were divided and arranged in ascending rows on opposite sides, so that the true effect of the double choir and orchestra was for the first time obtained. Mr. Joseph Barnby was placed between the two choirs, and to the unerring decision of his bâton may be attributed much of the excellence of the performance. The portion of the evening service which preceded Bach's Passion-music was impressively read by the Rev. S. Flood Jones, the Precentor, and the sermon was preached by the Very Reverend the Dean, who took for his text the 32nd verse of the 12th Chapter of the Gospel of St. John, "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto Me." After commenting upon the real signification of these words, the Dean most eloquently dwelt upon the true mission of music in elevating the religious feeling, and especially as illustrating the sacred story of the Passion of our Saviour. "In proportion as the Christian religion had become more spiritual," he said, "men had shrunk from those processions and sensuous images which in Southern countries had been and were still used at that season. But the divine faculty of song and music was by universal consent the most ethereal, the least material of all imaginations or representations, in its full development the pure creation of modern times, the especial product of the Reformation." The genius of Sebastian Bach, he said, had stimulated the people of Germany to the worthy celebration of the dying love of their Divine Redeemer. This was the true Protestant commemoration of Good Friday, and this, he hoped, "was the frame of mind in which he trusted those who were there had listened, and would listen, to the most solemn of all words represented in the most vivid and most touching form that human inspiration had produced." This sermon, dwelling with earnest appreciation upon the sublimity of the music which had already been heard and preparing the mind of the congregation for that which was to follow, was preached in its legitimate place, between the two parts of the Passion-music, the overpowering chorus, "Have lightnings and thunders," having concluded the first portion. Being unaccompanied by any of those distracting signs of departure so unfortunately obtrusive in a concert-room, the final chorus, "In tears of grief," was listened to with devout attention; and the blessing pronounced by the Dean terminated a service which will be long remembered as the first step towards the recognition in this country of the highest class of sacred music as a powerful agent in religious worship. It should be mentioned that Mr. Docker accompanied the recitatives with much skill on a harmonium, which had been kindly lent for the occasion by Messrs. Cramer, and that Mr Jekyll, assistant-organist at Westminster Abbey, presided at the organ. We cannot conclude this notice without conveying our sense of gratitude to the Dean for his zeal and liberality in opening a sacred edifice for the admission of the purest sacred music, and for aiding in promoting that religious feeling which such music should inspire by exhorting his congregation to accept this offering of genius with the earnest devotion which prompted its author during its composition.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

"Lucrezia Borgia" was the Opera selected for the opening night at this establishment, on the 15th ult., the part of Lucrezia being sustained by Madlle. Titiens. Considering that Madame Trebelli was the Orsini, Signor Vizzani Gennaro, and Signor Foli Don Alfonso, there can be really nothing to say upon the performance of the work, save, perhaps, that Signor Vizzani is gradually advancing to a higher place than he at first promised to occupy. "Linda di Chamouni" introduced Madlle. Ilma di Murska, for the first time this season, in the part of the heroine. Mr. Bentham, who made his début in the character of Carlo, received, as he deserved, every encouragement, and may, we think, fairly calculate upon gradually obtaining the position he aspires to, that of first tenor in a high class lyrical establishment; but it will not be yet. His voice is somewhat thin but of excellent quality, and his singing shows that he has studied in the right direction. He was of course slightly nervous, but when he gets more accustomed to the stage, there can be little doubt that he will make very rapid progress in the good opinion of the audience. Signor Moriamo, a very excellent baritone, who also made his first appearance in the trying part of Antonio, achieved a marked success, and will prove a most valuable addition to the company. Signor Borella was warmly welcomed as the Marchese, and there is every probability that he will occupy as high a place at this establishment as he did during the entire season at the Lyceum. Under the able direction of Sir Michael Costa, the orchestra is everything that could be desired, and the chorus shows unmistakeable signs of careful drilling.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The short reign of Madlle. Sessi before the real "stars" arrive at this establishment commenced on the opening night, the 28th March, when, as last year, the opera was "Lucia di Lammermoor." That Madlle. Sessi has not the highest attributes of a first-rate lyrical artist, must be at once conceded, we should imagine, even by her ardent admirers; but that she has sufficient talent, energy, and perseverance to sustain very creditably many of the leading characters in the most popular Operas has been amply shown during the last season, and will, no doubt, be as satisfactorily proved during the present one, for already has she sung through many of the favourite parts with neither more nor less success than formerly.

Madlle. Lucca, Madame Adelina Patti, and Madame Miolan-Carvalho have arrived with even an increase of power, and been received with the enthusiasm which their artistic merits demand. A word must be said for M. Faure, who, both by his singing and acting, has in the parts of Mephistopheles, Don Giovanni, and Guillaume Tell, infused a new spirit into these characters, which will, no doubt, render them doubly attractive during the season. Signor Mongini sings finely but unequally, as before, his best part unquestionably being Arnoldo, in "Guillaume Tell," in which his exceptionally fine voice tells with wonderful power. Signor Mario has also appeared, and been welcomed with a warmth which his long services before the public entitle him to. The Operas have been magnificently cast, and the season appears likely to become one of the most prosperous yet given.

GAIETY THEATRE.

Albert Lortzing if not a man of genius, was at least a man of industry, for he composed operas, wrote the libretti, and sometimes acted the principal part in them. But we question whether even his best work, "Czar und Zimmermann," is worth reviving. The lessee of the Gaiety Theatre, however, who seems resolved to make music a feature in the establishment, appears to think differently; and, tempted by the possession of such an artist as Mr. Santley for the part of the Czar, has produced the opera above-mentioned under the title of "Peter the Shipwright." Everybody knows, from the many English versions of the story which have been performed in England, that the plot turns upon the adventures of the Czar, who is working in the dockyard of Saardam, in disguise, a pompous old Burgomaster complicating matters by endeavouring to discover him amongst the shipwrights, and mistaking one of his fellow workmen named Peter, for the fugitive of whom he is in pursuit. Mr. Santley does all that possibly can be done for his share of the music, singing the song known in England as "In childhood I dallied," with such effect as to command an encore every evening, but he has very few opportunities for the display of his powers. The music throughout is flowing and generally tuneful; but the long concerted pieces remarkable for that occasional "prettiness" which is fatal to the production of anything like real art, become wearisome, and very many of them could be much shortened without any detrimental effect on the work. The best pieces in the opera are a partially unaccompanied Sestett, in the second act, a Romance, "Fare thee well," and a very characteristic Bridal Song, all of which usually receive encores. Miss Blanche Cole sings and acts well, as the niece of the Burgomaster, and Mr. Lyall is also most effective as the shipwright, Peter Ivanoff. A word of praise must be given to Mr. Gaynor, who sings the Romance "Fare thee well," with much artistic feeling. The "make-up" of Mr. Aynsley Cooke, as the Burgomaster, is positively repulsive. In the lowest style of burlesque it would scarcely be admissible, but in opera it is perfectly intolerable, and if Mr. Cooke have not more respect for his audience, the management, for its own sake, should interfere. We the more regret this blot upon the general excellence of the performance because this actor possesses qualities which, properly trained, might be turned to good account. The scenery throughout is beautifully painted, and the opera, with the exception we have mentioned, is carefully placed upon the stage.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

The concert on the 29th March was devoted to a performance of Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St. Peter," which was given, at least as far as the choral part is concerned, better than we have yet heard it. Nothing indeed could be finer than the management of the tone in the choruses "The Lord be a lamp," and "He is like a lamb;" "The deep uttereth His voice," and "We have a law," being also marvellous examples of precision and energy. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Raynham, and Mr. Santley were the principal vocalists. Madame Sherrington proved herself thoroughly equal to the execution of the whole of the placid music, "I mourn as a dove" being most exquisitely given; but the trying bravura solo, "Gird up thy loins," evidently taxed her voice to the utmost, and although she sang it, as she sings everything, like a thoroughly trained artist, we preferred her in the more quiet parts of the work. It is needless to say more than that the other vocalists were as successful as they have been on the former representations of the Oratorio; Madame Patey in the air "O, thou afflicted;" Mr. Sims Reeves in "The Lord is very pitiful," and Mr. Santley in "O that my head were waters," producing their usual effect upon the audience, and only escaping encores through the kind co-operation of the conductor, Mr. Joseph Barnby, who we trust will continue, as he has commenced, to oppose the system with unflinching resolution. The Oratorio was listened to throughout with marked attention, and the favour with which each piece was received proved that the work is rapidly growing in public estimation.

At the fifth concert on the 19th ult., Handel's Oratorio "Israel in Egypt" was given, with Mr. G. A. Macfarren's additional accompaniments. We spoke so much at length on the necessity of amplifying the instrumental scores of Handel when these accompaniments were first performed at the Norwich Festival of 1866, that it will now be unnecessary to do more than say that we received infinitely greater pleasure in listening to them at the Oratorio Concerts than at Norwich, because a special organ part, written by Mr. Macfarren, was played by Mr. Docker at St. James's Hall; and at Norwich, strangely enough, Mendelssohn's full organ arrangement, intended, as he says in his preface, to be used where a large orchestra cannot be obtained, was performed, as we believe, without alteration. The instrumentation supplied by Mr. Macfarren is indeed extremely rich, and never unduly obtrusive. The wind instruments are especially effective, and the stringed accompaniments to the recitatives prevent a sense of weariness in the listeners, and not only support the voices, but we should imagine come very near to the original intention of the composer. As this is thoroughly a choral Oratorio, Mr. Barnby's finely trained body of vocalists had an excellent opportunity of proving their real quality. The "Plague" choruses were magnificently sung, "He spake the word" and the "Hailstone" chorus rousing the audience to enthusiasm; and so vigorous was the demand for the repetition of the latter, that it was some time before the performance could proceed. The highest praise must also be awarded for the excellent manner in which the choruses "And with the blast." "Who is like unto Thee," and the concluding "Sing ye to the Lord," were rendered; the decision with which the points were attacked, and the minute observance of the various gradations of tone proving not only that the choir had been carefully prepared, but that it resolved to assert its power to grapple successfully with the most exacting choral work ever written. There are not many solos in this Oratorio, but the few it contains were excellently given. Mr. Raynham sang the opening Recitatives with a vigour, expression and justness of intonation worthy of the highest praise. Madame Sherrington and Madame Patey were thoroughly successful, the fine solo leading to the final chorus, "Sing ye to the Lord," being exquisitely declaimed by Madame Sherrington, and Madame Patey receiving the most enthusiastic applause for her expressive singing of "Thou shalt bring them in." It is impossible to describe the sensation produced by Mr. Sims Reeves in the air "The enemy said." Often as we have heard him sing this fine song, we can call to mind no rendering so absolutely perfect as was given on this occasion. For depth of expression, beauty of tone, and legitimate vocal power, Mr. Reeves has always been unrivalled, especially in sacred music; but his reading of the air was on this evening even beyond anything he has yet given us; and the storm of applause with which he was greeted at the conclusion could scarcely be restrained, even when all hope of an encore had subsided. A line of commendation must suffice for the excellent manner in which the duet "The Lord is a man of war" was sung by Herr Stepan and Mr. Beale; and praise must also be given to Miss Sinclair, who joined Madame Lemmens-Sherrington in the duet "The Lord is my strength." Mr. Joseph Barnby conducted with much care and judgment, and Mr. Docker presided at the organ. The room was crowded.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

As it is no part of the province of our journal to record the particulars of gorgeous court ceremonials, we have but brief mention to make of the opening of the Royal Albert Hall of Arts and Sciences, which took place on the 29th March. It is natural that the persons forming that aristocratic clique which represents the governing power of this new temple, should delude themselves into the belief that they had nothing to do but build a large Hall, under court influence, and then beckon art and science to Kensington Gore with a flourish of trumpets; but the people—and we presume that the people are appealed to, from the constant use of the word "national" in connection with the undertaking—will insist upon asking what warrant there is for supposing that anything can be better done at the Albert Hall than anywhere else; why, for instance, oratorios and grand vocal and instrumental works are to be dragged from their legitimate homes to this uninteresting locality; why a National School of Music, with nobody announced at the head of it, is wanted when one already exists with the recognised best musician of the day as Principal; and why, when chamber music is now, as a rule, played in rooms too large for its requirements, it should be transplanted to one the size of which may be guessed when we say that 8000 persons can be seated in it without being unduly crowded. Even before the opening of this building discontented people would put these inconvenient questions; but what can be thought of the future of a grand Hall in which music we are told is to be made a prominent feature, when the united wisdom of the authorities produced such a programme as the following, which formed the "Grand Miscellaneous Concert" on the opening day?

L'Invocazione all' Armonia . .	The late Prince Consort.
"Lascia ch'io pianga"	Handel.
"Ti Prego"	Curschmann.
"Salve dimora"	Gounod.
Prayer from "Masaniello"	Auber.
Overture to "La Gazza Ladra"	Rossini.

After such a specimen as this, any person who believes that music will be cultivated amongst the "arts and sciences" at South Kensington, should be rewarded for his faith by the grant of a box for life—and be made to go to every performance.

Respecting Sir Michael Costa's Biblical Cantata, which formed the principal musical feature at the opening ceremony, it is but fair to say that the composer has successfully struggled against the difficulties presented to him in the libretto—which seemed thrown together by accident—and has produced a composition which is justly entitled to be heard again by an audience not distracted by court surroundings. The choral part is unquestionably the best portion of the work. Of the solos, we must single out for especial commendation that given by Mr. Santley, "Through wisdom is a house builded," the instrumentation of which shows a thoroughly practised hand. In the "Miscellaneous Concert," which appeared listened to by the vast audience as a mere duty, the vocalists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley.

Two concerts have since taken place in aid of a "National Training School for Music." The first contained a selection of well-worn materials, for the due interpretation of which the talents of Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Cummings were secured in the vocal department, and Madame Arabella Goddard and M. Sainton in the instrumental. At the second concert the attractions were the singing of Madlle. Carola and Miss Enriquez, and a solo on the ophicleide by Mr. T. Hughes. A performance of "Elijah" by the Sacred Harmonic Society has also been given. It would be unfair perhaps at present to say too much about the reverberations caused throughout the building by the slightest musical sound, because a very pretty correspondence has arisen upon the subject in the public papers. When all has been done that can be done to lessen the defect, we may have some remarks to make on the subject.

MR. W. COENEN'S CHAMBER CONCERTS OF MODERN MUSIC.

Under this title, three performances of chamber music have been given during the past month, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The composers whose works have been selected from have been Volckman, J. Brahms, Rubinstein, Reinecke &c., all of whom have been well represented, some showing us what they can do, and others what they cannot do. Were we to express our individual opinion, we should unhesitatingly declare that we do not care if we never hear a note either of Volckman or Rubinstein again. J. Brahms and Reinecke are creative artists of whom we have a right to be proud, although the clear and musicianlike writing of the latter is in our judgment infinitely superior to the somewhat forced and exaggerated style of the former. At the last concert, on the 21st ult. Rubinstein's dreary and uninteresting Quartett in B flat, which was placed before Reinecke's Trio in D, depressed the audience to such an extent that nothing but the brightness of the succeeding piece, coupled with the composer's charming playing of the pianoforte part, could have induced many to remain. The Quintett, in F minor, by Brahms, which concluded the concert, is an unequal work, but contains much clever writing, the first movement and Scherzo being especially worthy of commendation. It was well played by Messrs. Coenen (pianoforte), Wiener and Yung (violins), Zerbini (viola), and Daubert (violoncello.) Herr Reinecke also performed, in his accustomed finished style some variations of his own upon Bach's Passepied (Op. 52) which elicited the warmest applause. The vocalist was Miss Sinclair, who created quite an effect in Mozart's "Parto," (well accompanied by Mr. Zerbini on the pianoforte) and also gave with much success, by way of contrast, we presume, two "Zuleikas," the first by Mendelssohn and the second by Schubert. Although we do not quite sympathise with the selection made by Mr. Coenen at these concerts, we willingly award him every praise for undertaking an experiment which can scarcely be expected to be successful in a pecuniary point of view. He is an earnest artist and an excellent performer; but we would remind him that there are better works in "modern music" than he has yet given us; and when arranging his materials for next season, it would be well for him to search amongst the chamber compositions of English writers; some prizes might be found which would be acceptable to his audience, even if he were compelled to displace the works of Volckman and Rubinstein.

An Amateur Concert in aid of the Charities connected with the Presbyterian Church of St. Andrew's, Shepherd's Bush, was given in the Lecture Hall adjoining the church, on the 29th March, before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss A. Adam, Miss Jackson, Messrs. W. H. Smith, Dessurn and J. D. Adam; assisted by an efficient chorus. Among the most successful pieces were, "Sweet and low" (Barnby) and "Sweet is the hour of rest" (Mercadante) by the choir; Chopin's "Polonaise, in A" and Schulhoff's "Impromptu," well played on the pianoforte by Miss E. E. Smith; "The Chafers," capitally given by Messrs. Newman, Smith, Dessurn and Adam, and encored; "O rest in the Lord" by Miss Jackson, and "Jerusalem" (St. Paul) by Miss Adam; Blumenthal's song "Far away where angels dwell" by Mr. W. H. Smith, and "Nazareth" (Gounod) by Mr. Dessurn. Mr. Wilkinson, R.A.M., and Mr. Cons (organist of St. Andrews Church), were excellent accompanists.

THE South Norwood Musical Society, conducted by Mr. W. J. Westbrook, gave its fourth concert on Monday March 27th to a large audience. The music comprised Mendelssohn's "Come let us sing," "Hear my prayer," "Lift thine eyes" and following chorus; Handel's "Zadoc the priest;" Barnby's "The soft southern breeze," and several other well selected pieces. Miss Annie Sinclair and Mr. Stedman assisted the Society, and helped the success of an excellent concert. The refinement and accuracy of the choral singing was especially remarkable.

THE first Anniversary of the opening of St. Anne's Church, Poole's Park, Seven Sisters road, was celebrated on Easter Sunday by two full choral services. At morning service the Psalms and Canticles were sung to chants by Crotch, Battishill and Sir. G. Elvey; the Te Deum to Stephens in C, and the Anthem was V. Novello's "The Lord is my strength." At evening service the Psalms and Canticles were given to Chants by Rev. P. Henley and G. Cooper, and the Anthem was "Behold how good and joyful," by Dr. C. Whitfeld. The Festival responses by Tallis were also used. The singing of the choir was excellent, especially in Novello's fine Anthem "The Lord is my strength," and the Bass solo, and duet in the evening Anthem were both well rendered. The organist, Mr. J. W. Davison, evinced much taste in accompanying, and also displayed the powers of a fine instrument in several selections from Handel's "Messiah."

THE Musical Society of the Bow and Bromley Institute gave an admirable Concert on Tuesday evening, the 28th March, under the direction of the conductor of the Society, Mr. Alfred Carder. The large Hall of the Institute was filled by a most respectable audience. The professional soloists who assisted were Miss Jessie Royd and Mr. W. Wells; Flute, Mr. B. Wells, and Piano, Mr. A. Carder. Amongst the most successful of the amateur singers were the Misses Roper, Cole and Limington. The singing of the choir was worthy the reputation it has achieved on former occasions at the Beaumont Institution and elsewhere. The programme included "Judge me, O God," and "Hear my Prayer" (Mendelssohn), and several part songs all of which were most carefully rendered. Mr. Carder may, we think, be congratulated on the successful manner in which he has trained one of the best choirs in the eastern part of London. There is a great desire to make the musical element an important feature at this Institute; and this we think may be most effectually accomplished with the means at command. The Hall is a magnificent one, with raised platform for orchestra, which can accommodate over 150 performers. There are seats for about 900 persons; and already there are 500 members of the Institute, a certain proof of its growing popularity.

THE members of the South Hampstead Choral Society, on Friday the 31st March., gave a private Concert at their practice rooms (the Schools, Maitland Park) under the direction of their able conductor, Mr. Bradbury Turner, Mus. Bac. From the many vocal works, all of which were successfully rendered, we may select for especial praise the "Lauda Sion" (Mendelssohn), and in the course of the evening one of the members performed Weber's Polonaise in E, and the first movement of Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata," both of which were remarkably well played and greatly applauded, the latter being re-demanded.

AN Amateur Concert was given on Friday evening, the 31st March, at Greville House, Paddington Green, by the Greville House Choir, assisted by a few friends. An excellent selection of music was given during the evening, consisting of songs, part-songs, glees, &c., the vocalists being Miss Lloyd, Messrs. Albiston, J. Knight, Dolling and Mattey (Members of the Choir), Master Kench, Messrs. Saunders, Sparrow, Goose and Adams, all of whom met with deserved success. Mr. Fowle presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. H. Goodacre conducted. The room was well filled.

AT Holy Trinity Church, South Island Place, Clapham Road, a special Easter sermon was preached by the Rev. R. A. Carden, D.D., on Sunday evening the 9th ult. to a large congregation, the subject of the reverend gentleman's discourse being the confutation of the Sadducees in relation to the day of resurrection, the text selected being St. Matthew xxii. 24-30. During the service a hymn, written for the occasion by Mr. Churchwarden Yarrow, and set to music (also for this occasion) by Mr. Goss, of St. Paul's Cathedral, was sung by the choir.

A CONCERT was given by Herr Sauerbrey's Choral Society on Wednesday evening, the 20th March, at Linden Hall, Linden Grove, with much success. The first part included Romberg's "Lay of the Bell" and Mendelssohn's hymn for contralto solo and chorus, "Lord, bow down Thine ear" (comparatively unknown in this country), in which Mdme. Sauerbrey sustained the solo. This lady also sang in the second part, (which consisted of miscellaneous music,) Meyerbeer's "Nobil Signor," and created a marked effect. The choruses, concerted music, and glees (especially Pinsuti's "Spring Song") were exceedingly well rendered, as were also the solos given by Miss Mayhew, Miss Gilby, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Wightman, etc., (all we believe,) members of the Society. Herr Sauerbrey conducted with much ability; and his performance of Beethoven's "Sonata pathétique" was everything that could be desired. A pupil of his, Miss Amy Stewart, played the accompaniments with taste and precision.

MR. OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT'S action against certain retailers of a paragraph, in which he was accused of spending the property of his wife, and reducing her to teach for a living, (a libel, we believe, originally published in America,) has read a lesson to journalists which we hope they will take to heart. The damages (£750), which at least in two cases were obtained, may appear "excessive" to gentlemen of a strictly legal training; but hearts can be broken by words as effectually as heads by blows; and persons who imagine that they can inflict such injuries upon defenceless persons with impunity, should be brought to their senses whenever the offence can be proved, by the infliction of the heaviest sum a jury will allow.

M. FETIS, who died at Brussels on the 26th March, at the age of 87, was well known, not only as a musical journalist, but as the author of several works on the art. Although his treatises on Harmony have been adopted, we believe, at the Conservatoire at Brussels, they have scarcely become standard authorities in the musical world; and there can be no doubt that his "Biographie Universelle des Musiciens," although full of errors which any musical student could correct, will hold its place as a book of reference for many years to come.

THE death of Mr. John Balsir Chatterton, which occurred on Sunday the 10th ult., has caused sincere regret amongst his numerous friends and admirers. Mr. Chatterton, who was harpist to the Queen, was one of the most esteemed professors of the Royal Academy of Music; and his funeral, which took place at Kensal Green, was attended by a large number of his brother artists. The deceased was in his 67th year.

A VERY excellent Soirée was given by the Westbourne Society, presided over by Madame Leupold, on the 1st ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms. The first part was miscellaneous, and included two instrumental pieces, the Overture to "La Clemenza di Tito," well played on the pianoforte by Miss Place and Miss Rich (pupils of Madame Leupold) and a Duo for pianoforte and harp, on airs from "Oberon," most effectively rendered by Miss Place and Mr. Oberthur. Amongst the vocal solos we must particularly mention Handel's "Let me wander not unseen," given with much spirit by Miss F. Brooke, and Dr. Stainer's highly dramatic song "Loyal Death," in which Mr. G. Smith displayed a bass voice of excellent quality. The second part was devoted to the performance of Mr. F. H. Cowen's Cantata, "The Rose Maiden," the solo parts in which were sustained by Miss Annie Sinclair, Miss Goodall (pupil of Madame Leupold) Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. H. Davis, the choruses being sung with commendable precision and energy, and with a due observance of light and shade, by the members of the Westbourne Society. The whole of this work was most effectively given, Miss Sinclair having evidently studied her music with much care, and Miss Goodall and Mr. Lloyd receiving encores which could not be resisted. Mr. Oberthur's harp accompaniment was a marked feature, the refined style of his playing being especially observable in the song "Bloom on, bloom on, my roses," which was sung with much expression by Miss Sinclair. The decision with which the choral portion of the Cantata was rendered was mainly owing to the watchfulness and care exercised by Madame Leupold, who conducted with a bâton, an example which we should like to see followed by other lady teachers, and which we hope will be adopted on all future occasions by Madame Leupold. The rooms were well filled, and the applause most enthusiastic.

A CONCERT was given on Thursday, the 20th ult., at the Cavendish Rooms, Mortimer Street, in aid of the funds of the Church of St. John the Baptist, Great Marlborough Street. The following artists were engaged —Miss Patti Laverne, Madame F. Eldon, Madame Dunsford, Messrs. Roper, Herbert, Maurice, and J. B. Bolton. Miss Patti Laverne especially distinguished herself by her excellent singing, and Madame Eldon was successful in the song "Life hath many joys." Mr. J. B. Bolton sang "Hearts of oak" and "The Bellringer" with taste and expression. The concert was conducted by Mr. Van Noorden, who also played a solo with his usual ability.

ON Monday evening, the 17th ult., a concert for the benefit of the choir fund of St. Philip's, Arlington Square, Islington, was given in the schoolroom adjoining the church, by the members of the St. Philip's Choral Association, assisted by the choir of St. Clement's, East-cheap. The general character of the performance was excellent, the choruses and part-songs especially being marked by great steadiness, clearness of delivery, and attention to light and shade, reflecting the highest credit on the able conductor, Mr. Batchelor. Several vocal solos were also given, and in every respect the concert was highly successful. A balance of upwards of £8 was realised by the performance.

AT an invitation concert on Thursday evening the 20th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, given by Messrs. Lamborn Cock and Co., the publishers of the work, a new Cantata for female voices by Mr. Henry Smart, called "King René's Daughter," was performed for the first time. The principal vocalists were Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Rebecca Jewell, Miss Sophie Ferrari, and Miss Marion Severn. The pianoforte accompaniment throughout the work was played with much delicacy and refinement by Mr. Arthur O'Leary, who was joined by his clever pupil, Miss Whomes, in the overture, which is arranged for four hands. The excessive melodiousness of the Cantata, the grace and artistic finish of the accompaniments, and the youthful freshness of the voices, both in the solo and choral parts, produced an excitement in the room which did not subside until the composer bowed from the Royal box, in acknowledgment of the well deserved compliment bestowed upon him. As the Cantata will probably come under review in our next number, we must now content ourselves with recording that the beautiful duet with chorus, "There is a fair maid" (the principal singers being Miss Rebecca Jewell and Miss Marion Severn), was enthusiastically re-demanded; that Miss Sophie Ferrari gave the charming song "I love the rose" with such excellent expression as to elicit the warmest marks of approbation, and that the duet "Sweet the 'Angelus' is ringing," (also sung by Miss Rebecca Jewell and Miss Severn,) effectively woven in with the chorus, very narrowly escaped an encore. There can be no question that this Cantata, which has all the elements of popularity, will be eagerly sought for by Choral Societies possessing good and reliable female voices. There was also a miscellaneous selection, in which Miss Whomes played with much effect Mr. O'Leary's clever pianoforte piece on "Where the bee sucks;" and vocal pieces were given by Madame Anna Jewell, Miss Marion Severn (who sang Smart's capital descriptive song "The Petrel's Warning"), Miss Francesca Ferrari, Mr. Percy Rivers and Mr. Robert Hilton. Miss Kathleen Moultrie, (a pupil of Dr. Steggall at the Royal Academy of Music,) evinced much talent in the performance of some organ arrangements of Sir Sterndale Bennett's compositions, and delighted every hearer at the conclusion of the concert by playing Bach's Grand Fugue in B minor. Mr. Walter Macfarren, who accompanied the vocal music, performed two pianoforte solos of his own, a Tarantella, and a graceful little sketch called "Twilight," with so much executive power and refinement of touch as to call forth a demonstration which might well have been accepted as a demand for their repetition.

MR. H. H. BATTLEY, for some time assistant-organist of Harley-street Chapel, Bow, was presented by the Rev. Wm. Bevan (Minister) and the congregation, with a valuable time-piece and despatch-box, on Thursday the 13th ultimo. On the time-piece was engraved: "Presented to Mr. H. H. Battley in grateful acknowledgment of the service he has frequently rendered to Divine Worship, by presiding at the organ in Harley-street Congregational Chapel, Bow, 13th April, 1871."

THE tenth of a series of Concerts took place at Bass's Rooms, Pimlico, on the 17th ult., before a large audience. The vocalists were Miss Gates, Mr. Tedder, Mr. Sharpe, and Mr. William Godfrey. Several solos of a popular character were sung during the evening, amongst the most successful of which may be mentioned "Rock me to sleep," by Miss Gates; Weiss's "Village Blacksmith," by Mr. Tedder; and two songs—Dibdin's "Tom Bowling" and Balfe's "First Kiss"—artistically rendered by Mr. William Godfrey, who has a really good tenor voice. Mr Arthur Ellis (a pupil of Mr. Charles Hallé) played Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," with much effect and was warmly applauded.

ON Thursday evening, the 20th ult., a concert was given at Myddelton Hall by the pupils of Mr. James Robinson, organist of St. Mark's Church, Myddelton square. Miss Deakin played a pianoforte solo with much effect, and Mr. Walter Reeves was encored in the song "Let me wander," composed for him by Mr. J. Robinson, and sung for the first time on this occasion. The part-song "O! hush thee, my babie," was well rendered, considering that four of the performers were of ages ranging from six to eight years. The pianoforte duet "Faust" (Osborne), was admirably performed by Miss Deakin and Mr. J. Robinson, and several vocal pieces were most successfully given, Miss McQuire receiving quite an ovation. On the whole the concert was very successful, and reflected great credit on Mr. James Robinson, the tutor of the performers.

Choral Symphony) at the last of this Season's Subscription Concerts, on Friday evening, the 5th inst., at St. James's Hall. Both works will be given under the direction of Mr. Barnby, by whose choir they were so excellently rendered last season, and they will be performed without any alteration from the original score.

At a visit recently paid to the manufactory of Cramer's American Organs, we were greatly interested by an inspection of the novelties and improvements lately introduced into the construction of these instruments. Not many years ago, the Harmonium was an object of dislike to the majority of musicians, not only on account of its defective mechanism, but also—and primarily—in consequence of its peculiarity of tone, a peculiarity which asserted itself in an unpleasant manner even under the most favourable circumstances. This disagreeable quality of tone appears, however, to have been completely eradicated in Messrs. Cramer's instruments, which, whilst retaining the portability of the Harmonium, have gained most of the refinement and charm of the Organ. A mechanical contrivance—something in the nature of a small fan violently put in motion—by which a perfect tremolo is produced, is not the least of the many advantages possessed by these instruments.

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

The Tritone: a method of Harmony and Modulation, founded on a system of inversion of numbers, and adapted to the scale of keyed instruments. By Joseph Green.

Upwards of twenty years ago Chaluz de Vernevil's "Geneuphonic Grammar," founded upon the system invented in Spain by General Virués y Spínola, made its appearance in England, dedicated, by permission, to his late Royal Highness the Prince Consort. How little sensation it produced in this country may be gathered from the fact that methods of Harmony have been extensively taught, lectured upon and discussed in which the leading principles laid down in this work are not only never alluded to, but utterly reversed. Considering that when the manuscript of "Geneuphony" was presented by the author to the King of Spain, the commission appointed to determine whether the book should be printed at the expense of the government, pronounced it to be the only work which revealed the secret of nature "as to what produces, constitutes and regulates Harmony"—a decision endorsed by competent authorities in France and England—we should certainly think it extraordinary that more attention had not been drawn to the volume were we not convinced, from experience, that clear-headed musical theorists have, as a rule, become so enamoured of their system that wherever certain existing facts have not fitted with their rules, they have either passed them over or rejected them as faults Spínola, in his Grammar of Geneuphony, says, "The only consonance is the third" and that "the mediate or generative principle of Euphony is the minor third." If we compare these assertions with those of Dr. Day, in England, the disagreement between the two appears remarkable; and yet both were excellent theorists and diligent searchers after truth.

Mr. Joseph Green, the author of the work before us, is partially a disciple of "Geneuphony," but although, as we have said, this system has been pronounced perfect, not only in its general principles, but in all its details, the "Tritone" is written to show us, what unfortunately has been so often discovered in the practical application of many other excellent theories, that it must not be accepted as infallible. Speaking of the Geneuphonic diagram, called the "Typometer," Mr. Green says "In preliminary trials of the rule of progression thus derived, it appeared correct; but in certain cases when the typometric chords were inverted, when their order was reversed, or the fixation of the key momentarily disturbed, the rule failed theoretically; and in all cases it was tedious in practice, from the difficulty of at once identifying a chord according to its name and place in the typometers of different keys." It would be quite impossible in the space at our command to give even an outline of the rules laid down in the "Tritone," but we may say, in the first instance, that we quite agree with the author that his plan of treating harmony as "the root and stem from which melody proceeds," is much more sensible than the reverse method adopted by the Geneuphonists. Taking it for granted that a theory of Harmony can be founded naturally and truly upon the twelve subdivisions of the tempered scale, Mr. Green bases all his laws upon a series of formulæ, derived from the numbers 1, 5, 3, 7♭, and their inversions in the octave, 1, 4, 6♭, 2. We greatly fear that the author's system of inversion by numbers will perplex musical students who are at all imbued with the received meaning of the word inversion: he says "what is meant in this treatise by a number and its inversion are the distinct notes in the scale the two numbers represent; for instance, 1 to 5 is C to G in ascending, and the inversion is 1 to 4, C to F, in ascending; but we can scarcely believe that so novel a theory will be at all universally admitted. Again, we think the statement that the octave is the only consonance will be generally received as so startling that when we are merely told, as a reason, that a necessity for the resolution of all other intervals exists, "but not obviously," few musicians will believe the case to have been made out. Our author, however, appears to think differently; for with the confidence usually assumed by inventors of musical theories, he precedes some observations on the page following that in which this assertion is made, by the words "Taking it for granted that the octave is the only true consonance in music," a sufficient proof that he concludes he has made converts of his readers, at least up to this point.

To do Mr. Green justice, we must say that he has reasoned from his premises throughout the work with much logical acumen. His remarks upon Modulation, although perhaps not containing anything so really new as he seems to imagine, are exceedingly ingenious and clearly expressed. The same may be said of his rules for and observations upon Counterpoint; and all his examples are well chosen and to the purpose. We scarcely know why he has called his work the "Tritone;" but we presume that he considers this chord (represented in the group of harmonics by the figures 3, 7♭) as so decidedly indicative of the key as to be of the highest importance. The same principle, however, as that which guided the inventor of "Geneuphony" to a title, should, we think, have actuated the author of the present work, and we should then have had a more comprehensive name for his method than that which he has adopted. In conclusion, we recommend Mr. Green's book to the careful perusal of all who feel an interest in investigating the laws of what is popularly called "Harmony." Many will dissent from the views therein laid down; but all must admit that the work is the result of earnest and patient study, and as such is at least entitled to be judged without any preconceived prejudice.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Parts V. to X. Edited by W. Spark, Mus. Doc.

Perseverance, whether successful or not, always demands our sympathy, and perseverance Dr. Spark certainly possesses, as is proved by the varied styles of composition and schools of music which his editorial net has enclosed in these numbers of his "Organist's Journal." On the whole the study of them does not, however, tempt the thoughtful musician to become enthusiastic in praise of modern organ compositions. There is a sad dearth of novelty of form. Here are stereotyped Fugues true to the letter of the law, here are stereotyped Andantes true to the current form now nearly a century old. Must all musical phrases be four or eight bars in length? and must all modulate into the dominant or the relative minor of the dominant? One would think so from a perusal of these pages. Do we not take up sometimes a volume of old sermons, and on perusal marvel that our ancestors could Sunday after Sunday hear a chance sentence from the Bible divided regularly into three heads (after a high-flown exordium), and then made the teacher of a moral, drawn up, certainly in the most approved form, yet altogether to the very core, lifeless, meaningless, and quite without an appeal to the heart. Too similar is the result of an abuse of musical form, for it is in the power of almost any tolerably experienced musician to write Andantes as fast as a conjuror can draw lengths of string from his mouth, yet such music has not power to touch the heart, and in all probability will share the unenviable fate of all other unrealities. But it must be of course understood that a fault of the age is being pointed out, not a fault of Dr. Spark; only, a work such as this, in which so many well known authors appear as contributors, offers to the musical thinker an opportunity of gauging contemporary claims of merit. The compositions of Smart and Steggall call for praise, those of the former especially. The name of Parratt, less known than the two already mentioned, must some day be considered a guarantee for much original thought and device. Merkel all educated organists have learnt to respect. Mr. Westbrook is mediocre. Kühmstedt is certainly not deficient in quantity, though variable in quality. A contribution from G. A. Macfarren cannot but be a valuable morceau. Professor (written in full) Graedener (Hamburg) decks the already highly decorated chorale "Ein' feste Burg" with some very uninteresting quavers and semiquavers. A movement by Barnett is pleasing, though not original. To give a careful analysis of each number would be profitless to the analyst, and tedious to the reader; suffice it to say, here are wares of all kinds, pretty, ugly, strong and weak: he can assuredly satisfy his cravings, whether they be for a high or a low class of music.

Ave Verum. Motett for four voices. Dedicated to Mr. Henry Leslie. Composed by Charles Gounod.

That a Motett should have an introduction of seven bars, to be sung "con boccha chiusa," or rather, not to be sung at all, but "hummed," is a strange sight for English eyes, and would be a strange sound to English ears, when performed in sacred precincts. Church musicians will be relieved to hear that this introduction may be played, if it be desired so to do. The melody of this simple, yet deep composition, is most charming, and cannot but please and delight all who make its acquaintance. The harmonies, though never more than a plain support of the air, are not wanting in occasional touches of wholesome vigour; and the general effect of the music, whether the fine Latin, or exceedingly well adapted English version be used, cannot but be impressive and devotional.

O God, Thou art worthy to be praised. Anthem by Arthur S. Sullivan.

There is a freshness in the style of some parts of this Anthem which ought at once to commend it to the notice of those who are looking in the right direction for new church music. The first movement especially is so bold and vigorous that its shortness is to be regretted. The Quartett which follows, though melodious and most "singable," scarcely however rises above the ordinary standard. The final chorus opens with a theme given out by the soprani alone, afterwards taken up by the tenori, accompanied by the other three voice-parts. The whole Anthem is so simple in construction as to be well within the powers of almost any moderately trained choir, and undoubtedly will be a most useful addition to the repertory of churches and cathedrals.

Il Trovatore (The Troubadour). An Opera, in Four Parts, by Giuseppe Verdi. Edited, and Translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

The place of this work has been so thoroughly settled by the public supporting our lyrical establishments, that it will be unnecessary for us to say one word on its legitimate claims to such a position. It is certainly one of the most popular of all the modern Italian operas; and it will indeed be welcome news to the many who for years have followed the fortunes of Leonora and Manrico through the medium of common-place "hand-books," when they are told that for a mere trifle more than they have been accustomed to pay, they can have a splendid edition of both words and music, which is not only designed for use in following the opera during its performance, but for permanent service on the desk of the drawing-room pianoforte. In every respect the manner in which this opera is put forth deserves the warmest commendation. The translation is excellent throughout, the music indeed in very many parts flowing equally well with the English as with the Italian words—notable instances of which will be found in the Cavatina, "Tacea la notte," and the well known song, "Stride la vampa"—and attention must also be drawn to the careful manner in which all the stage directions are given, and the several important points of the score indicated. We predict a large sale for this opera.

Unbelcved. A Song for a Bass voice. Words by Gerald Massey. Music by J. Stainer.

There are so few compositions of any importance especially written for bass singers that vocalists possessing this quality of voice should thank Dr. Stainer for providing them with so excellent a song as the one before us. The placid opening phrase, in F major, is beautifully harmonised; and in the Adagio in D major (the change into $\frac{9}{8}$ rhythm being partially anticipated by the triplet accompaniment in the preceding four bars) a good effect is gained by the warding off the key-note close until the conclusion. We can scarcely reconcile ourselves to the $\frac{6}{4}$ on C, in the key of F, after the chord of D major, at the commencement of the last phrase of the song; but the return to the subject in the voice part is extremely effective; and too much praise cannot be given to the admirable manner in which the feeling of the poetry is preserved in the music. This song is likely, we think, to become a general favourite.

Tears of Childhood. Song. Written by Rea. Music by Berthold Tours.

Like all the songs of Mr. Tours, this composition expresses faithfully the words, without thought of the model in which vocal works must be cast to fit the market. That this is the right road for an artist to travel towards enduring fame need not be again pointed out; for it is not because this truth is so commonly set aside in the race after temporary popularity that it should cease to be admitted as a truth. We have only to congratulate Mr. Tours, therefore, on the courage he has shown in resolving to wait for, rather than to wait upon, the good opinion of the public; and can assure him that if he continue to write as good songs as the one before us, he will not have to wait long. The tender phrase at the commencement, with a charming figure in the accompaniment, crossing above the voice part, is deeply sympathetic with the poetry. Beautiful also is the whole of the musical sentence which, creeping up through the keys of C major and D minor, bursts on a piano phrase in B flat major, the original key being most naturally and effectively regained by a modulation into C, which becomes the dominant, the voice sustaining the high G on the chord of the dominant seventh. We are not usually so technical in our reviews; but in this case we are tempted out of our usual course by the musicianlike treatment both of the vocal and instrumental portion of this composition. Mr. Tours may have written songs which with a general audience might produce more effect, but we regard this as the most poetical of all we have yet seen by this composer.

Novello's Part-Song Book. (Second Series). A collection of Four-part Songs. Composed by J. L. Hatton.

Vol. 6, for S.A.T.B.

Vol. 7, for A.T.T.B.

These two elegantly bound volumes will indeed be a boon to the collectors of part-music; for, apart from the intrinsic merit of the compositions, all those most suitable for presentation in such a shape, have been so excellently re-arranged by the composer for mixed voices that they are quite as effective as in their original form, for male voices only. The sixth volume contains thirty-five songs, twelve of which are re-arrangements of a portion of those written for male voices in Volume 7. The world-wide celebrity of Mr. Hatton's Part-songs will render it unnecessary to review them in detail; but we cannot refrain from drawing attention to "When evening's twilight," "Absence," "Good Night," "The Sailor's Song," "Stars of the Summer night," "Jack Frost," "Bird of the wilderness," "If thou art sleeping," and "Hark, the Convent bells are ringing," as most exquisite models of what unpretentious and melodious part-music should be. We need scarcely say that we have only selected these as specimens of the gems in the casket; but those who possess themselves of the entire collection will find every variety of musical feeling amply appealed to. Where accompaniments are used in some of the songs contained in Volume 7 (for male voices only) the direction that "the right hand must be played an octave lower than written," should be carefully attended to, or the effect will be completely marred.

Scherzo in D minor (Quintet, Op. 18) by Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by E. Pauer.

Those acquainted with Herr Pauer's excellent arrangements and transcriptions of the best classical works will be glad to find this well known Scherzo from the Quintet adapted for the Pianoforte by so practised a hand. To give it due effect, it will unquestionably demand a true finger and fluent execution; but all who can command these qualifications will both give and receive pleasure in its interpretation. Performers will be glad to find that wherever a doubt might arise, the fingering is marked,

Aubade, pour le Piano.
La Kermesse. Scène Rustique, pour le Piano.
Composées par Adolphe Schloesser.

We have placed these pieces together as being in effective contrast for performance. The first is full of animation, and excellently descriptive of its title. The double pedal at the commencement is of course common property in the composition of pastoral music, but it is effectively treated, and ceases before it becomes wearisome. The first theme is characteristic and melodious, and the second subject, in the subdominant, moving in vigorous chords in both hands, gains interest by the semiquaver passages which take us back to the original melody on the key-note pedal, by the simple means which such simple music demands. Well played, this unpretending composition cannot fail to be successful. The second piece is a very graceful and expressive song without words, given to the left hand, with a staccato accompaniment for the right. As in the first composition, no attempt is here made at a display of profound erudition; the subject flows on quietly and naturally, the harmonies are appropriate, and the modulations never unduly forced. Where the theme is taken in octaves with the two hands, the passages are by no means awkward to play, the management of the touch being the principal difficulty. The conclusion of the piece, in which the subject gradually dies off, is extremely effective.

Favorite Airs from Wagner's Opera "L'Olandese Dannato" ("Der Fliegende Hollander") Arranged as Solos and Duets for the pianoforte, By Arthur O'Leary.

Wagner's operas are scarcely suited to be cut up into "Books of Airs," for the dramatic action is so interwoven with the music throughout that it is difficult to get a continuous piece to set before an amateur in the drawing-room. Mr. O'Leary has however performed his task admirably, and indeed has succeeded in managing his materials so cleverly that the melodies played through as they stand will form a much more satisfactory reminiscence of the opera than a so-called "Fantasia," with all the arpeggios and shakes usually employed in the manufacture of these works. The arrangement of the airs is excellent; and we cordially recommend the piece to all who desire to make acquaintance with Wagner's highly imaginative and characteristic composition, although we need scarcely say that it is only on the stage that the genius of the composer can be truly manifested.

Poppies, pale, on thy pillow weep. Serenade. Words by Florence Percy.

Composed by Kate Lucy Ward.

Both these songs show more feeling for melody than harmony. The first has a pleasing vocal theme, but it is accompanied feebly. There is nothing, however, incorrect in the harmony to the voice-part; but we must take exception to the progression in the last bar of the opening symphony, where the contrary motion is kept up to the close on the key-note, in spite of what happens in the progress of the parts. We like the second song better. The melody is flowing, and it is more thoughtfully accompanied than the Serenade. Let the composer, however, try the effect of the $\frac{4}{3}$ on E, instead of the $\frac{6}{3}$ on C, in the first crotchet of the 4th bar, page 3. Many improvements of this kind may be effected with a little care,

The Sequential System of Musical Notation. By William A. B. Lunn. Fifth Edition.

This system of musical notation was first published in 1843 (under the nom de plume of "Arthur Wallbridge") other editions having since appeared in which the method has been gradually improved. For obvious reasons, we can deliver no opinion on the merits of Mr. Lunn's reform; but must content ourselves with the following quotation, which throws some light upon the claims of the new system to public attention, "An arbitrary arrangement of sounds has hitherto prevailed, which renders change of key clumsy and difficult. Even the human voice, the most flexible and perfect of all instruments, to which every key is equally 'natural,' has been subjected to this bondage. In the Sequential System no such necessity is recognised. Vocal music is written independently of all artificial considerations; and it is only in instrumental music that the peculiarities of the instrument for which it is intended need be thought of." The various laudatory opinions of the press, which are appended to this new edition, bear ample testimony to the favour with which the leading principles of "Sequentialism" have been formerly received by the most competent critics; and there can be little doubt that this latest development of the system must ensure at least an equal amount of careful and impartial consideration.

The Emperor. Grand Fantasie Heroique on "Die Wacht am Rhein." Expressly composed for and dedicated to Herr Louis Lee, by Albert Pieczonka.

We do not know who Herr Louis Lee (for whom this piece is said to have been expressly composed) may be, but if he finger the chromatic scale as he is here directed to do, we think the "Glissandissimo," marked over the passages must be somewhat difficult to attain. The composer, however, (whose name is new to us) has produced a good showy Fantasia which, well played, may successfully stir up the German patriotic feeling, and this is we presume what is principally aimed at. The passages are exceedingly well written throughout, and lie well under the hand.

Bruton and Co., Bristol.

A moonlight Song. Notturno, for Piano; by A. Whitaker.

It is perhaps unnecessary to multiply pieces of this class—seeing that pianoforte "Songs" are written for every part of the day, and partly through the night—but if more are wanted, Mr. Whitaker has supplied one which may take its place amongst the graceful trifles of the hour. A subject without much claim to novelty, but sufficiently melodious for the purpose, is first given out, with the left hand crossed over the right for the accompaniment, and the conventional ornaments are afterwards used in the usual manner. Mr. Whitaker should attempt something not so decidedly cut to the received pattern.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Will you allow me to draw your attention to an error in the April number of the Musical Times, giving an account of Mr. Henry Leslie's third concert, wherein Miss Ellen Horne is stated to be a "pupil of Mr. Leslie." I beg leave to say that Miss Ellen Horne and Madame Poole, the two ladies so favourably noticed, have been for some time, and still continue, under my sole tuition.

The insertion of this letter in the forthcoming number of your valuable periodical, will greatly oblige,

Yours obediently,

FRANCES HARRIET NOBLE,
Associate R.A. Music.

3, Fitzroy Street, Fitzroy Square W.
April 14, 1871.

[We willingly give Mrs. Noble the opportunity of publicly claiming her very clever pupils. We knew nothing whatever of the antecedents of Miss Ellen Horne, and announced the name of her instructor on the authority of our contemporary, the "Musical Standard."—ED. Musical Times.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Perhaps some of your readers may help me in a little difficulty I have met with—viz., the real meaning of Andantino. According to "Hamilton's Dictionary of Musical Terms" it is slower than Andante. Rodolphe (the French Master), S. Glover and others give the same meaning in their instruction books—while on the other hand, Sydney Smith and others give as the meaning not so slow as Andante. The termination of Andantino (ino) being a diminutive, it must mean less Andante, so if Andante means rather slow, Andantino cannot mean slower. I should like some satisfactory evidence as to the real meaning of the words. I am, Sir,

Yours faithfully,

R. M.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

No notice can be taken of the concerts at Grantham and Andover, as "Thursday evening" and "Wednesday evening" cannot be accepted as dates. We trust that many other correspondents who send us communications of a similar character will take this hint.

ITALIANO is informed that we cannot insert any letter unless the name and address of the writer accompany the communication.

H. GALBRAITH.—Were we to adopt our correspondent's suggestion we should degrade a critical review into a trade advertisement. We certainly think that in catalogues of songs it would be a great convenience to the public if the particular voice for which each composition was written (and perhaps, even the compass it embraces) were stated; but it cannot be supposed that it is the office of the reviewer to supply information which is considered unnecessary both by composers and publishers.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ALLOA, N. B.—The Musical Association gave Mendelssohn's Elijah on Tuesday, the 28th March, to a crowded house. The orchestra numbered 22 performers, and included The Drechsler Hamilton Family, of Edinboro', whose playing was much admired. The whole of the solo parts in the Oratorio were sung by members of the Society, and so well as to reflect much credit on the sound training of their conductor. The choruses were excellently rendered, the precision with which the points were attacked being highly commendable. At the close a vote of thanks was given to the Society, and also to Mr. A. Alexander, organist of St. John's, the conductor, for the highly successful manner in which the work had been performed.

ANSTWICK, YORKS.—On the 14th ult., a Concert of sacred and secular music was given by the Anstwick Choral Society, assisted by Miss Ellis and several amateurs. In the first part, the choruses, "O Father" (Judas Maccabæus), "Lift up your heads" and "Hallelujah" (Messiah) were rendered in a manner which reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. Hedgman. The solos were "Lord remember David," "But thou didst not leave," and "Thou art gone up on high." The remainder of the programme consisted of vocal solos and part-songs. Miss Ellis gained a well-deserved encore for both her songs.

BACUP.—The new organ erected by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, of Hull, was opened on the 29th March by Dr. Spark, of Leeds. The programme included selections from the Messiah, the solo parts being assigned to Miss Amy Empsall, of Bradford, who was especially successful in "But thou didst not leave," and Mr. A. Wroe, of Bury, whose singing of "The people that walked in darkness" was much admired. The choruses were well given by a choir of between forty and fifty voices, conducted by Mr. John Lord, bandmaster. The powers of the organ were most effectively displayed by Dr. Spark in several pieces; the Fugue, which concluded the performance, being executed in masterly style.

BATH.—On Thursday, the 31st March, Mr. Bianchi Taylor's choir gave the fifth public rehearsal at the Assembly Rooms. The programme comprised selections from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise and Elijah, and Spohr's Last Judgment. Several of the solos were excellently sung, especially "Praise the Lord, O my Spirit," by Miss Andrews; "The sorrows of death," by Mr. Smith; "If with all your hearts," by Mr. Jesse Moody; and "It is enough," by Mr. Estens. Praise must also be awarded for the rendering of the trio, "Lift thine eyes," by the Misses Andrews, Edwards and Howarth; and the duet, "Forsake me not," from the Last Judgment, was exquisitely given by Miss Brettele and Mr. J. Moody. The execution of the difficult choruses reflected the highest credit upon the training of Mr. Bianchi Taylor, who conducted. A small and effective band was well led by Mr. Owen; Miss Taylor skilfully accompanied on the pianoforte, and Mr. Brownall presided at the harmonium.

BERKHAMSTED.—The fine old Church here was re-opened on Friday, the 14th ult., after a restoration which has cost about £5000. A new organ has been erected in the church, which was opened by Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac. Oxon., of Lewisham, who gave a performance in the afternoon, and played a voluntary in the middle of the morning and evening services, with much effect. The organist of the church, Mr. Macrone, accompanied the choral portions of the service, which were rendered by an efficient surpliced choir. The collections at the morning and evening services amounted to £213 2s. 11d.

BLACKHEATH.—A very excellent Concert, under distinguished patronage, was given at the Alexandra Hall, on Wednesday, the 12th ult. The vocalists were Miss Alice Fairman, Mrs. George Brocklebank, Fraulein M. Balke, Mr. Croft, and the "London Orpheus Quartett;" Pianoforte, Herr Henseler and Mr. Koetlitz; violin, Mr. Brockelbank; violoncello, M. Paque. The programme comprised among other pieces the duet "Mira la bianca luna," exquisitely sung by Mrs. Brockelbank and Mr. Croft. Miss Fairman's fine contralto voice was heard to advantage in Randegger's song, "To thee, my love," but the glee singing of the "London Orpheus Quartett" appeared to give most satisfaction, the encores of the evening being awarded to the glees "Pretty maiden," and Truhn's "Three Chafers," the last of which was unanimously re-demanded. The pianoforte performances of Herr Henseler and Mr. Koelitz were much admired, and M. Paque's solo on the violoncello was rendered with his usual effect. The proceeds of the concert were devoted to a charitable object.

BLACKPOOL.—On Monday evening, the 27th March, the Blackpool Vocal Society gave the second and last Concert of the season in the Assembly Rooms, Talbot Road, to a large audience.

The first part comprised a selection from Handel's Judas Maccabæus, Haydn's Creation, and Mendelssohn's eight-part psalm Judge me, O God. The second part, which was entirely secular, included the music to Macbeth. "Allegiance we swear," and "Sleep, gentle Lady," Bishop. The principals were Miss Webbe, Miss Webster, and Messrs. Grime, Warner and Stanton; accompanists, Messrs. Grindrod and Wrigley; conductor, Mr. N. Dumville. The chorus deserves commendation for its fine rendering of Mendelssohn's Psalm, and Bishop's "Allegiance we swear" (encored), the precision of the singing reflecting the utmost credit on the conductor. The "National Anthem" concluded the Concert.

Bradford.—The Concert on Saturday, the 25th March, was one of the most delightful of the season, and introduced for the first time to Bradford the Halifax Glee and Madrigal Society, numbering fifty voices. Under the conductorship of Mr. R. S. Burton, of Leeds, the members of the choir opened the concert with "Strike the Lyre," which was sung with exquisite taste, and received with a burst of applause. They next sang "Behold the Woods," by Mendelssohn, the light and shade in which was observed with a delicacy and refinement certainly never surpassed in Bradford. The other pieces were Smart's "Spring," Spofforth's "Hail smiling morn," Benet's "Flow, O my tears" (A.D. 1599), Cooke's "When wearied wretches," Dowland's "Come again, sweet love" (1580), and Smart's "Stars of the summer night." These were all finely given, and received with unmistakable signs of approbation.

Bubslem.—On Monday evening, the 10th ult., the Tonic Sol-fa Choristers of North Staffordshire took higher ground than they had ever before attempted to occupy by producing Mendelssohn's Oratorio, Elijah. Amongst the most noticeable points in the first part, we must especially mention the vigorous rendering of the music descriptive of the contest between Elijah and the priests of Baal, the careful singing of the fine tenor airs, "If with all your hearts," and "Then shall the righteous," by Mr. Lloyd; the unimpeachable delivery of Elijah's prayer, "Lord God of Abraham," by Mr. Brandon, and the quartett of angels, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord," by the four principal singers. The part of "The Youth," too, was well sung by Master Cliff, one of the boys of the choir; and the additional parts in the double quartett, trio, and quartett and chorus, were taken by Mesdames Wheeldon, Munden and Barnett, Master Sheldon, and Messrs. Bentley, J. Wood, and Gibson, of the choir. In the second part, Miss Poyntz gave, in a highly artistic manner, "Hear ye, Israel," and Mr. Brandon distinguished himself by his singing of "It is enough, O Lord; now take away my life." But the gems of this part were the trio, unaccompanied, "Lift thine eyes," given by Miss Poyntz, Mrs. Munden, and Mrs. Lincey-Nalton; and the air, "O rest in the Lord," by Mrs. Lincey-Nalton. The members of the choir maintained the prestige they have so long enjoyed; and, more especially in the second part of the Oratorio, displayed such a natural appreciation of the colouring required as to show that the excellent training of their conductor had not been thrown away upon them. The part of Elijah was carefully given by Mr. Brandon; Miss Poyntz as soprano, and Mrs. Lincey-Nalton as contralto, sang the music allotted to them in a very creditable manner; and Mr. Lloyd displayed good qualities of voice and much feeling in the tenor songs. The band, consisting of the usual selection from Mr. C. Hallé's orchestra, assisted by some of the best local amateurs, and led by Mr. Seymour, contributed much to the success of the performance. Mr. Walker, at the organ, rendered material aid, and Mr. Fowell was, as usual, an efficient conductor.

Carlisle.—On the 28th March a very excellent Concert was given by the Carlisle Choral Society at the County Hall, before a large audience. The first part was devoted to Handel's Serenata, Acis and Galatea, the principal parts in which were sustained by Miss Clelland, Mr. W. Grayson and Mr. Brandon, all of whom were highly effective. The choruses, especially "Wretched lovers," were given with commendable energy and precision. In the second part the vocalists mentioned above appeared, with the addition of Miss Ruth Harlow, of Manchester, and gave several vocal pieces with much success. The "Tramp chorus," in which Miss Clelland sang the soprano solo, was received with marked favour. Mr. Metcalfe conducted, Mr. John Scott led the orchestra, and Mr. John B. Scott efficiently acted as accompanist, relieved occasionally by Miss Clelland and Mr. Brandon.

Cheshunt.—On Monday, the 17th ult., Miss Annie Hensmon gave a Concert in St. Mary's Hall, assisted by Miss Dwight, Mrs. Mackay, Mrs. T. Bokenham, Mrs. Emmott, Messrs. R. K. Trotter, W. H. Smith, W. C. Bell, Lansdowne Cottell and Cecil Burch. Miss Hensmon has a pleasing voice, and was exceedingly well received. The programme included instrumental and vocal solos, all of which were highly successful.

Cobham, Surrey.—The Cobham Choral Society gave an excellent Concert on the 20th ult. (being the last of the season), before a numerous audience. All the part-songs were well sung—Alfred Plumpton's "If thou art sleeping, maiden," Hatton's "The Village Blacksmith," and Miss Macirone's "Sir Knight, Sir Knight," especially, being admirably rendered and loudly applauded. Guglielmo's song, "The Maid of Marano," was well sung by Miss J. Jupp. The Rev. G. Bancks (President of the Society) gave Dr. Stainer's fine song, "Jilted," in a masterly style. The duet "Out in the Sunshine" (Ciro Pinsuti) was well given by Miss J. Jupp and Mr. G. Jupp, and encored, and a similar compliment was paid to Mr. G. Smith for his singing of "My pretty Jane." Miss E. Bennett also made a marked impression in Guglielmo's song "Signora." The instrumental pieces, "La Violette" (Herz), "Lebe Wohl" (Heinrich Proch), and "Il duolo d'amore" (Otto Nicolai), were well played by Mr. J. Kitcat, Miss Kitcat, and Mr. H. P. G. Brooke. The singing of the choir reflected the utmost credit upon the conductor, Mr. H. P. G. Brooke. It is gratifying to state that this Society now numbers seventy members.

Colchester.—On Friday, the 14th ult., Herr Werner, bandmaster of the 27th Inniskillings, gave a Concert at the Public Hall. The band played an overture, "Zampa," a selection from "Nabuco," and Strauss' valse, "Blue Danube;" and Herr Werner, performed also on the clarionet in excellent style. Several ballads, &c., given by Mrs. C. Winterton, Messrs. Cocks, Cleather, Wodehouse and Logan, were received with much satisfaction by a large audience.

Cudham, Kent.—On Wednesday evening, the 19th ult., the series of winter evening entertainments which have been so successful in this parish, was brought to a close. On that evening the usual programme of a Penny Reading was exchanged for that of an entertainment of Vocal and Instrumental Music, an interesting programme being provided for the occasion. The playing of Mrs. Withers, Mrs. Alwen, Miss Hankins, and Mrs. Thompson, and the singing of Mrs. Withers elicited much applause. Mr. Pearce (who is a general favourite) was also highly successful. Great credit is due to the choir for the manner in which the part-music was rendered, considering that the class has only been in existence a little more than three months. There was a large audience, and several pieces were re-demanded. At the close of the concert, Mr. Gregory proposed a vote of thanks to those friends who had so kindly given their assistance during the season, and expressed an earnest hope that there may be a similar service next winter.

Dresden, Longton.—On Monday, the 17th ult., a Concert was given by lady and gentlemen amateurs, for the benefit of the organ fund for Dresden church. The room was well filled, and the vicar, the Rev. — Salt, had the pleasure of announcing that the proceeds of the performance quite freed the congregation from debt. The singing of Mr. Fellows, of Bilston, and Mrs. Adderley, was highly appreciated. Mr. W. A. Marson, of Stafford, performed two solos on the violin, and was encored. The Misses Edwards and Mr. White, the organist, presided at the pianoforte, the former playing an effective duet, and Mr. John D. Mort, of Stafford, gave two solos on the cornet with much success. At the conclusion of the concert a vote of thanks was proposed by the vicar to the ladies and gentlemen who had so kindly given their services.

Dumfries.—Handel's Oratorio, Samson, was given with much success by the Dumfries and Maxwell-town Choral Society on the 27th March, at the Mechanics' Hall. The solo vocalists were Miss Clelland, Miss Ruth Harlow, Mr. W. Grayson and Mr. Brandon. There was an efficient band, and the chorus numbered nearly 100. Miss Clelland sang most effectively "Ye men of Gaza," "With plaintive notes," and "Let the bright Seraphim," and Miss Ruth Harlow was equally successful in "Return, O God of hosts." Mr. Grayson, in "Total eclipse," and Mr. Brandon in "How willing my paternal love," were also much and deservedly applauded. The choruses were remarkably well given. Mr. Bridgeman presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. Pattinson at the harmonium.

Edinburgh.—An Organ Recital was given by Professor Oakeley in the Music Class-room on Easter Eve, before a numerous and attentive audience. The programme contained an excellent selection of the highest classical music, most of the pieces being especially appropriate to the season.

Exmouth.—The Harmonic Society gave its eighth concert at the Assembly Rooms on Thursday evening, the 23rd March, when the Messiah was very creditably performed. The place of Mr. Pook, absent from indisposition, was worthily filled by Mr. W. Vinnicombe (the baton in the meanwhile being assumed by Mr. E. Vinnicombe), and although undertaken at a very short notice, the whole of the bass music was well sung. Mr. Trehane earned much favour in "Comfort ye my people"; and, rendered "He dwelleth in heaven," in an equally striking and effective manner. The other principals were Miss Maria Vinnicombe (contralto), and Miss Annie Vinnicombe (soprano); each of whom has made decided advances in the profession since her former appearance before an Exmouth audience. Among the choruses, "For unto us," and the concluding one, "Worthy is the Lamb," were perhaps the most effective. Thanks are certainly due to Mr. Wm. Vinnicombe for bringing the members of the Society to such a state of efficiency; and especially so, for his untiring energy in the double capacity he undertook in the present emergency. Mr. E. Vinnicombe ably presided at the harmonium; and Miss Wood at the pianoforte.

Eye, Suffolk.—The members of the Eye Church Choir, gave their fourth annual Concert, in the Corn Exchange, on Tuesday the 11th ult., under distinguished patronage. The programme was divided into two parts, sacred and secular, the former including "Balaam's prophecy," by Dr. Spark, "Waft her Angels" (Jephtha) and "O House of Jacob," from Benedict's S. Peter, (both charmingly sung by Mr. F. Page Roberts, B.A., of Cambridge), an anthem composed for the occasion by Morton Latham, and "See the Conquering Hero" (Judas), sung with great precision by the choir. Among the secular pieces were Barnby's "Sweet and Low," "The Village Choristers," two German melodies, "Lorely" and "Wanderlied," the latter very effectively sung by tenors and basses, in unison with full chorus, Calkin's "My Lady," Hatton's

"Belfry Tower," and Callcott's "Mark the merry elves." Secular solos were also given with much success by Mr. Roberts, Mr. Sloper and Mr. Ship. Miss E. M. Jukes presided at the pianoforte with much taste, and Mr. M. Deadman conducted. The proceeds of the concert amounted to £30.

GLASGOW.—The choir of Queen's Park Established Church gave its third annual concert of sacred music in the church on the 29th March. The performance was conducted by Mr. R. Donaldson, the honorary organist and choirmaster. Mr. Whitham presided at the organ, and Mr. Emile Berger at the pianoforte, the accompaniments being furnished by these instruments together or singly. The programme consisted of pieces which, with one or two exceptions, were entirely new to Glasgow. Foremost among these, both in position and importance, was Haydn's Passion music, which was performed for the first time in Scotland. With the exception of the final movement the music is uniformly slow, solemn, and mysterious, and is strikingly suited to the gravity of the text. The second part of the programme contained four numbers from Sir Julius Benedict's new Oratorio, St. Peter, the most noticeable being the chorus, "The Lord be a lamp," a beautiful and devotional movement in 9-8 time. This portion of the concert also included two new sacred pieces, "The way is long and dreary," and "It came upon the midnight clear," composed for this occasion by Mr. Sullivan. Both were highly effective, and the audience made an ineffectual appeal for the repetition of the second. Gounod's well-known Ave Maria, and Sir Sterndale Bennett's "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out" were very nicely sung by two lady members of the choir, the former receiving an encore. The church was crowded with an audience which seemed fully to appreciate the enterprise shown by Mr. Donaldson and the choir in the production of new works of sterling merit.

GREASBRO'.—The members of the Greasbro' Church Choir gave their eleventh annual Concert on Easter Monday, in the School-room, to a numerous assembly. All the part-songs were well rendered by the choir (which is now considered the first in the district), under the directorship of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Warburton. The following members, as soloists, are deserving of special mention:—The Misses Higgins and Rhoadhouse, and Messrs. Cawthorne, Whittaker, Whittington, Stringer, and Myers. The choir is a voluntary one, and these concerts are given by the members without any assistance whatever.

GREAT STANMORE.—On the 12th ult. a Concert was given in the National Schoolroom, by the Stanmore Choral Class, assisted by Miss Hosegood and Miss E. Hosegood; Pianoforte, Mr. G. B. Dobson. The Rev. L. G. Bernays presided. The programme was varied and well selected, and several songs were encored. Mr. J. A. Drage conducted.

GREENOCK.—A Service of Sacred Music was given in the Mid Parish Church, on the 7th ult., when the choir had the assistance of several musical friends. The programme included a number of pieces introduced for the first time to a Greenock audience. The choir, which numbered about forty voices, sang, on the whole, with much effect, although occasionally betraying a want of sufficient rehearsal together. The pieces specially noticeable for their excellent rendering were—Chorus, No. 2, from Mendelssohn's "Festgesang," "Te Deum laudamus" (Hopkins), in G, "He that shall endure" (Elijah), and Elvey's "Arise, shine." The solo vocalists were completely successful, particular praise being due to Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," and the tenor and bass airs, "If with all your hearts," and "Lord God of Abraham," from Elijah. The Trio from Mendelssohn's unfinished Oratorio, Christus, was a prominent feature of the evening, although the composer's intention was departed from, it being sung by female voices. Spohr's "Blest are the departed" was also most impressively rendered. Mr. Alex. Hamilton was a most efficient conductor, and the care he has given to the training of the choir was evident from the great attention that was paid to expression in each piece. A special word of commendation is due to the organist, Mr. Poulter, who accompanied with much skill during the evening, and his solos were not the least enjoyable parts of the programme.——THE fifteenth annual private Concert of the Greenock Choral Society was given on the 14th ult., at the Town Hall. The first part of the programme was devoted to Spohr's Oratorio, The Last Judgment, which, considering the difficulties of the work, was extremely well rendered. The choral portions, especially, receiving full justice. A word of praise must also be given for the manner in which the duet "Forsake me not" was sung by both vocalists, and Mr. Peace, who ably presided at the organ, has a right to be congratulated on the general excellence of the performance. The second part was secular, and included a new song, composed by Mr. D. Middleton, called "The Repulse," (well sung by Mr. William Boyd), and several vocal pieces, all of which were highly successful. Mr. Peace was enthusiastically encored for his excellent performance on the organ of Auber's Grand Triumphal March, composed for the inauguration of the London Exhibition of 1862. The concert was conducted by Mr. D. Middleton.

HALIFAX.—The first Concert of the Quartett Union was held in the new lecture theatre of the Museum, Harrison Road, on the 17th ult. The programme included Haydn's Quartett, No. 82, in F, Mozart's Pianoforte Quartett in G minor, and Mendelssohn's Quartett (for strings), in D major, Op. 44. The performers were Mr. Cooper (1st violin), Mr. Whitaker (2nd violin), Mr. Bowling (viola), and Mr. Pettitt (violoncello), the pianoforte part in Mozart's Quartett being well played by Mr. Whitaker. The vocalist was Madame Tonnelier, who sang a song from Weber's Der Freyschütz, and a grand scena from Spohr's Faust, in excellent style.

HORNCASTLE.—The first Concert of the Choral Union was given in the Exchange Hall, on the 11th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Price. The programme included choruses, glees, duets and solos, in the execution of which the performers were highly successful, the duet "My pretty page," (sung by Mrs. Jackson and Mr. Price) being re-demanded. The programme was repeated on the following evening, when Master Price received an encore for his singing of "My own, my guiding star." The Association has been in existence barely four months, and already numbers more than 100 members.

HUDDERSFIELD.—On Wednesday, the 12th ult., an amateur Concert, for the benefit of the Huddersfield Infirmary, was given in the Assembly Rooms, Queen Street, under distinguished patronage. The performers consisted of a party of gentlemen amateurs from Leeds, assisted by Madlle. Liebhart. The programme contained songs, ballads and part-songs, the whole of which were rendered in good style, several being encored.——THE one hundred and forty second Concert of the Huddersfield Choral Society (and last for the season) was given on Friday, the 14th ult. The programme was selected from Mendelssohn's Elijah, the principal vocalists being Madame Tonnelier, Mrs. H. L. Cooper, Miss Crossland, Mr. Barras, Mr. Young, of Wakefield, Mr. Garner and Mr. Stocks. Leader, Mr. H. C. Cooper; conductor, Mr. R. S. Burton. Madame Tonnelier, Miss Crossland and Mr. Garner were highly successful, and received several encores. On the whole the concert was a decided success, the hall being crowded.

JEDBURGH, N.B.—An evening concert of sacred and secular music was given by the Jedburgh Musical Association in the Corn Exchange on the evening of Tuesday, the 28th March, to a crowded audience. The sacred part consisted of selections from the Oratorios of Judas Maccabæus and the Messiah, and Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm, As the Hart pants. The choir, numbering upwards of 50 voices, acquitted itself well throughout; the choruses, "Hallelujah," "Worthy is the Lamb" and "Amen," being especially effective. The airs, "Angels ever bright and fair" (Theodora,) and "How beautiful are the feet," (Messiah,) were well given by one of the lady members of the Society; and "Arm, arm, ye brave," (Judas,) by one of the gentlemen. The secular part was highly successful. Of the choral portion the most noteworthy numbers were Horsley's "See the Chariot at hand," R. L. de Pearsall's "A Chieftain to the Highlands bound," and a quartett and chorus "When Gossips love," by the talented conductor, Mr. A. C. Mounsey, to whose untiring zeal the Society owes its existence and present flourishing condition. Mr. J. Adlington, of Edinburgh, presided at the harmonium and pianoforte with much skill.

KELSO.—An interesting service took place on the 11th ult., in connection with the opening of a new and handsome organ, with which, in addition to the many munificent gifts her generosity has already bestowed on the congregation, Mrs Robertson of Ednam House, has provided St. Andrew's Episcopal Church. Professor Oakeley kindly gave his services for the occasion, and opened with an extemporaneous voluntary. The psalms and hymns were sung by the resident choir of sixteen voices, assisted by the choir of St. Paul's, Edinburgh, and were rendered with great precision and effect. Hymn 335, "Edina," a favourite tune, the composition of Mr. Oakeley, was rendered with singularly careful attention to musical light and shade, and furnished a fine specimen of what congregational singing ought to be. During the offertory, Mr. Oakeley played a voluntary from Bach. "Worthy is the Lamb," followed by the "Amen" chorus (Handel), formed the concluding voluntaries; but those who lingered at the close had the pleasure of hearing Bach's "Grand Fugue in G minor," played in masterly style. The new organ, built by Messrs Forster and Andrews, Hull, at a cost of nearly £400, is admirably suited to the size of the church, and is in every respect a really fine instrument.

KILMARNOCK.—On the evening of Saturday, the 25th March, Mr. M'Laren, musicseller, gave a popular Concert in the Corn Exchange Hall. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland, soprano; Miss Ruth Harlow, contralto; Mr. Grayson, tenor; and Mr. Brandon, bass. The programme included a variety of vocal pieces, which were rendered in a highly artistic and effective manner. One or two solos were also played very cleverly by Miss Dubery Taylor, a juvenile pianist of much promise. The concert was altogether one of unusual excellence.——THE Kilmarnock Philharmonic Society gave Handel's Messiah on the 12th ult., with much success. The principal vocalists were Miss Banks, Miss Adelaide Newton, Mr. Perren and Mr. Lander, all of whom were highly effective. Miss Banks in "I know that my Redeemer liveth," Miss Newton, in "O thou that tellest," Mr. Perren in "Thou shalt break them," and Mr. Lander, in "Why do the nations," producing a marked impression upon the audience. The local orchestra (which has been ably led during the season by Mr. Drummond), was assisted by the Drechsler-Hamilton family of Edinburgh, and was thoroughly efficient throughout the Oratorio. The choruses were rendered with remarkable precision, and great praise is due to the excellent conducting of Mr. Dixon. We are glad to record that the Fever Hospital, for the funds of which excellent Institution the concert was given, will benefit largely by the performance.

LANCASTER.—A very successful performance of the Messiah was given by the Lancaster Choral Society in the Music Hall, on Wednesday, the 12th ult., the object being to raise funds for the enlargement and re-erection of the organ in the Parish church. The principal vocalists were Miss Clelland, Miss Harlow, Mr. Grayson and Mr. Brandon, who gave the solos with excellent effect. The choruses were remarkably well sung, especially "For unto us a child is born" and the "Hallelujah." The band consisted of members of Mr. C. Hallé's orchestra, assisted by amateurs of the town. The Oratorio was ably conducted by Mr. Dean, to whose exertions the efficient state of the Choral Society is mainly due.

LEAMINGTON.—The Leamington Philharmonic Society gave two performances of the Creation in the Royal Assembly Rooms on Wednesday, the 29th March. Mr. R. Ward, whose long connection with the Society has contributed in no small degree to its excellence, conducted, and Messrs. Tuke and Grayson with Madame Sutton, from the Lichfield Cathedral choir, were the principal vocalists. At the morning Concert there was a select attendance of the local gentry, and in the evening the tradespeople and their friends mustered in considerable force. Both Concerts were exceedingly good, and gave the greatest satisfaction. The best songs were "With verdure clad," and "On mighty pens," by Madame Sutton; "Rolling in foaming billows," and "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," by Mr. Tuke; and "God created man," by Mr. Grayson. The band was efficient, and the choir showed evident signs of careful training.

LEEDS.—The Town Hall Popular Concerts continue to attract crowded audiences. The concert on Saturday, the 1st ult., was devoted to operatic music, the vocalists being Madame Ida Gillies-Corri, Miss Bloomfield, Mr. Wm. Parkinson, and Mr. Henri Corri; Mr. T. W. Dodds presiding at the pianoforte, and Dr. Spark at the organ. Several pieces were enthusiastically encored.

LISKEARD.—The Choral Society gave its first Concert on the 14th ult., at the church school-room, which, despite the unfavourable weather, was filled to overflowing. The programme was miscellaneous, and included several part-songs and choruses, in which the choir, numbering over one hundred members, was heard to advantage. Mdlle. Patti Laverne, who had been specially engaged, met with a hearty reception. Her chief songs were "O luce di quest 'anima," "Cherry Ripe," and "Sing birdie, sing," all of which were encored. The instrumentalists included Mr. Fly, bandmaster South Devon Militia, Mr. Isaacs, and Mr. A. C. Faull, Plymouth. Mr. Fly (cornet), Mr. Isaacs (violin), and Mr. Faull (piano), performed solos with marked success. The choir was well trained and reliable. The part-songs were carefully rendered, admirable time being kept in each. The whole of the performance was under the experienced bâton of Mr. F. N. Löhr.

LIVERPOOL.—Immediately upon the conclusion of the usual band rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society on the 17th ult., Mr. E. W. Thomas, the well-known and able leader of the orchestra, thus addressed Sir Julius Benedict:—"Sir Julius,—In virtue of my office I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without offering you, on behalf of the gentlemen of the band and myself, our hearty congratulations on the honour conferred upon you by Her Majesty. It is an honour which reflects many ways. It reflects on the musical profession generally, and especially on those over whom you preside. As a matter of course, it reflects on you, Sir Julius, as its recipient, and it reflects back upon Her Majesty, whose discrimination has bestowed 'honour where honour is due.' With regard to the merit which has elicited this distinction, little need be said, as it is patent to the world, the composer of St. Peter having made his mark as a musician in the highest sense of the word. There is no one having a love for his art but must recognize in you, Sir Julius, a true artiste whose honest zeal and integrity of purpose is shown in everything you undertake. You have also, sir, in your relation with us, exhibited an uniform courtesy which cannot but endear you to all you come in contact with. I will conclude these few remarks, as the exponent of the band and in my own person, by wishing you, Sir Julius, many years of health to enjoy the distinction which has been so worthily bestowed on you." This very happy expression of the views of his confreres of the orchestra was given with much distinctness and evident feeling by Mr. Thomas, eliciting frequent marks of approval, and Sir Julius Benedict acknowledged the compliment in a few well-turned sentences, his command of language, although a foreigner, being as remarkable as the geniality of manner and admirable taste for which he is so universally and deservedly beloved.—The sixth Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on the 18th ult., the solo performers being Mdlle. Sessi and Signor Bagagiolo. The great instrumental feature of the evening was Beethoven's Sinfonia in C (Op. 21), which went charmingly. The overtures were Wallace's to Lurline, and Weber's to Der Freischütz. Gounod's brilliant new "Saltarello" and gorgeous "Pageant March" in the Reine de Saba were also given, and much applauded. The fine voice and noble style of Signor Bagagiolo were heard to advantage in "Vieni, la mia vendetta," from Lucrezia Borgia, and two pieces from Gli Ugonotti, the "Piff, Paff" song being encored.

MALVERN WELLS.—Mr. Rogers has done much for the improvement of the singing of the choir at St. Peter's Church (of which he is organist), and it must be gratifying to him to receive so many compliments upon the success of his teaching. On the 13th ult., he arranged an evening concert which was largely and fashionably attended. The performance was given in aid of the choir fund, and consisted of vocal and instrumental music, which was rendered in a truly artistic manner. Two pieces were well played by Miss Campbell and Mrs. Fowler (pianoforte), and Mr. Rogers (harmonium), and rapturously applauded. The Rev. A. Fowler, performed a flute solo, and Mr. T. Lockett, two of De Beriot's Airs for the violin, both of which were enthusiastically applauded. Miss Adams (of Malvern), sang, with much effect, two ballads accompanied by herself on the pianoforte. The other portion of the concert consisted of songs and part-songs, excellently rendered by members of the choir.

MANCHESTER.—The Concert given by the Athenæum Musical Society on the 14th ult., was highly successful. The first part consisted of Mr. Joseph Barnby's Sacred Idyll Rebekah, the principal parts in which were sustained by Miss Higham, Messrs. Shorrocks and Davison, all of whom were thoroughly effective. Miss Higham especially eliciting much and well-deserved applause in all her solos. The choruses on the whole were rendered with good effect. The second part was miscellaneous—Randegger's "Cradle Song," by Miss Heywood, and "Let me wander not unseen," by Miss Taylor, being especially worthy of commendation. Amongst the part-music, particular praise must be awarded for Miss Macirone's "Sir Knight, Sir Knight," and Macfarren's "Robin Goodfellow." Dr. Hiles conducted, and accompanied with much ability.

NEWNHAM, GLOUCESTERSHIRE.—Mr. and Mrs. Morgan gave their fourth annual Concert at the Town Hall, on Monday, the 17th ult., before a large audience. The Misses Foote, of Bath, sang several songs and duets with much ability, all of which were encored. Messrs. Morgan, Pickford, Wrenn, Turner, Jones and Barnes were the other vocalists. Mr. J. Hooper, of Gloucester, was very successful in his execution of two pianoforte pieces, both of which were re-demanded; he also shared the duties of accompanist with Mrs. Morgan. Some interest was felt in the performance of Miss Morgan (12 years of age), who both played a piano solo and sang a song in a very promising manner.

NEWTON-LE-WILLOWS.—The fifth annual Concert of the St. Peter's Choral Society was held in the Town Hall on Tuesday evening, the 11th ult. The music, especially Birch's Operetta The Merrie Men of Sherwood, seemed to give general satisfaction. Amongst the important recent additions to the vocal strength of the Society we may mention the names of Mrs. Gibson, soprano; Miss Jefferson, contralto; Mr. Wilkins, tenor; and Mr. Gaskell, bass. Mr. Smith conducted, with his usual success, and Mrs. Smith skilfully presided at the pianoforte.

NEWTON NOTTAGE, BRIDGEND, GLAMORGANSHIRE.—An effective organ has been erected in this church by Messrs. Walker and Sons. It was opened on Tuesday, the 11th ult., by Mr. C. Warwick Jordan, Mus. Bac., Oxon (Organist of St. Stephen's, Lewisham), and gave great satisfaction.

NORTON WOODSEATS.—A Concert of sacred and secular music was given in the school-room by a party of vocalists from Sheffield, on Wednesday evening the 12th ult. The first part consisted of selections chiefly from Handel and Mendelssohn, all of which were well executed. The second part contained principally glees and songs, a selection from Acis and Galatea eliciting warm applause. A beautiful glee, "Welcome Joy and Feast," in which all the vocalists took part, concluded the evening's entertainment, which was a complete success. Mr. E. Lee, presided at the pianoforte.

NORWICH.—The first of a series of three Concerts was given in St. Andrew's Hall on the 27th March, before a crowded audience. The programme consisted exclusively of sacred music, and comprised selections from Haydn's Service in C, No. 2, Elijah and the Messiah. The solo vocalists were Madame Vanzini, Madame Patey, Messrs. Patey and H. J. Minns. Madame Vanzini did not create much impression as an interpreter of the highest class of sacred music; but Madame Patey, as usual, sang with the expression and finish of a consummate artist. Mr. Minns was successful in "Comfort ye," and Mr. Patey gave the music allotted to him with excellent taste. The trio, "Lift thine eyes" (in which Master Self, of the Cathedral choir, joined Mesdames Vanzini and Patey) was encored. We must also mention that Gounod's new sacred song, "There is a green hill" (exquisitely given by Madame Patey) was enthusiastically re-demanded. The choruses were rendered with remarkable energy and precision; and the band, which has been much strengthened in many departments, was thoroughly efficient. The concert afforded ample proof of the improvement which has been effected both in the choir and the orchestra, under the able direction of the new conductor, Mr. Henry Rudd.

PLYMOUTH.—Haydn's Oratorio the Creation, was produced on the 18th ult., at St. George's Hall, by the Plymouth Vocal Association with much success. The band, led by Mr. Henry Reed, was thoroughly efficient, and the choruses were given throughout with commendable precision. The soloists were entitled to almost unqualified praise. Mr. Thomas sang all the music allotted to him with much effect; and Mr. Rogers, an amateur, was also highly successful. His rendering of "In native worth," shewed him to be far above the average of professional tenors. Mdlle. Cora de Wilhorst sang for the first time in an English provincial town. The possessor of a voice rich, melodious, singularly flexible, and of great range as well as power, this lady sings with much artistic finish and grace. "On mighty pens," in which, as on two or three other occasions, the upper C was brilliantly sustained, was a finished performance, and she was repeatedly and enthusiastically applauded.

PONTYPOOL.—On Thursday, the 20th ult., the members of the Elementary Singing Class, in connection with the Sacred Harmonic Society, met together in the Town Hall, and presented the conductor with a very handsome "Stationary Cabinet," completely furnished, and bearing the following inscription on a silver tablet:—"Presented to Mr. Charles Lawrence, by the members of the Pontypool Harmonic Elementary Class, as a mark of their appreciation of his valuable services as Instructor. Pontypool, April 20th, 1871." The testimonial was accompanied by a beautifully illuminated address.

RAMSGATE.—At St. George's Hall, on the 28th March, a Concert of the Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society was given, when Mr. B. F. Baker's Cantata, called The Burning Ship, was performed for the first time in Ramsgate. The work, which consisted of three parts, was most favourably received. The solos were expressively rendered by the Misses Hogbin, Mrs. H. May, Messrs. Chandler, May, Larkins and Duckett, and the choruses were given with commendable spirit and precision. The second part contained an excellent selection of vocal music, all of which was highly successful. The concert gave the utmost satisfaction, and reflected much credit upon Mr. Duckett, through whose exertions the members of the Society have made such satisfactory progress. The entertainment was given in aid of the funds of the Ramsgate and St. Lawrence Royal Dispensary; and we are glad to say that after paying all expenses, the sum of £15 will be handed over to the Charity.——It is with much pleasure that we record the gift, from some members of the congregation, of a very handsome oak pulpit, as an Easter offering to S. Mary's Church. The pulpit was used for the first time on Easter Day. The architect who designed and superintended the construction was Mr. John Newton, of Salisbury Street, Adelphi, London, and the work was executed by Mr. Robinson, wood carver, of 173, High Holborn, to whom great credit is certainly due for the skill and success with which he has carried out the architect's design. The Easter Day services were, if possible, more successful and hearty than ever, and the floral decorations were extremely beautiful. The choral parts of the services, under the direction of Mr. Thorne, the able and talented organist, were most correctly and efficiently rendered, the two anthems in the evening, "Worthy is Lamb," after the 3rd Collect, and the "Hallelujah Chorus," after the collection of the alms, being sung with excellent effect.

REIGATE.—The annual Concert of the Reigate Choral Society took place on Thursday evening, the 20th ult., under the distinguished patronage of the Right Hon. the Earl and Countess Somers, &c. The programme included Mozart's Twelfth Mass and Haydn's Spring; and the principal vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Jenny Pratt, Mr. Montem Smith and Mr. Maybrick. The band included several of the best London professors, and was led by Mr. H. Blagrove, with his accustomed ability. Mr. Thurnam's choir sang the choruses in a manner deserving of all praise, and the band was, on the whole, very effective. Mr. Thurnam conducted with much efficiency.

SCARBOROUGH.—A special performance on the organ was given on Easter Monday afternoon by Mr. Naylor, Mus. Bac., organist of the parish church of St. Mary. The programme included, amongst other interesting works, one of Handel's organ concertos, arranged by Mr. Best, the "Recordare," from Mozart's Requiem Mass, an "Offertoire" by Wely, and two of Sebastian Bach's pedal fugues, all of which were excellently rendered, and listened to by the large audience with much attention. At intervals the choir sang two Easter hymns, with one of which the performance concluded.

SITTINGBOURNE.—The second annual Festival of the Church Choral Union took place in the afternoon of the 12th ult. at the Parish Church, the choir on the occasion numbering nearly 300 voices. The full choral service was rendered with much precision and good taste, Goss's Anthem, "O taste and see" especially, being beautifully sung. Precentor, the Rev. J. S. Hoare. Mr. Kinkee, of London, presided at the organ.

SLOUGH.—Mr. Orlando Christian gave an evening Concert at the Literary Institution on the 17th ult., which was well patronised. Several glees from the Standard Glee Book were given by Messrs. T. Smith, Large, Mellor, Summers, Ramsbottom, and Christian, including "The Cloud-capp'd Towers" (Stevens), and "Queen of the Valley" (Callcott). Miss Poole was very successful in "The Gleaner" (Glover), and "Guardian Angels" (Violetta), both being encored. Madame Weiss gave "Non e ver," and sang a duet with Mr. O. Christian, "Help me, man of God," from Mendelssohn's Elijah. Mr. Gustav Weiss, who sings with great expression, was successful in Kücken's "Twilight is dark'ning" and "Anita" (B. Richards), and Mr. Christian was honoured by an encore in both his songs, "The Wreck of the Hesperus" (Weiss), and "The light of other days" (Balfe), as was also Mr. Mellor in "Farewell my Mountain life" (Hatton). Solo pianist, Miss Lazarus; solo cornet, Mr. M. Kelly; conductors, Mr. Mellor and Mr. W. F. Summers.

SOUTHSEA.—On Friday, the 6th ult., the Borough of Portsmouth Choral Society gave an excellent performance at the New Southsea Baths Assembly Rooms, of Haydn's Creation, before a large audience. The solos were taken by Miss Susanna Cole, Mr. W. Offord and Mr. Horscroft. Miss Cole, who is always a great favourite with a Portsmouth audience, sang exceedingly well, as did also Messrs. Offord and Horscroft. The members of the choir, although not so numerous as on former occasions, sang with much precision, and proved that they had been carefully trained by their conductor, Mr. Godwin Fowles, F. C. O.

SOUTH SHIELDS.—The members of the South Shields Tonic Sol-fa Association gave their annual concert, under distinguished patronage, on Tuesday evening the 4th ult., in the Large Hall of the Mechanics' Institute, on behalf of the building fund of the Ingham Infirmary. The first part of the programme consisted of a selection of sacred pieces, and the second was composed entirely of national airs, several of which were encored. Mr. W. Mc Kenrick, A.C., the teacher of the Association conducted with his usual ability, and Mr. W. Mason, presided at the piano. This Association which has only been formed about two years, reflects great credit on Mr. Mc Kendrick.

SOUTHWELL.—The last Concert of the Choral Society for the season was given on Tuesday, the 18th ult., at the Assembly Room. The first part consisted of the Kyrie and Gloria from Beethoven's Mass in C and a selection from Haydn's Creation. Miss Dixon and Mr. Clegg sang with much taste in the duets "By thee with bliss," and "Of Stars the fairest," and the choir maintained its reputation by the manner in which the choruses were rendered. The second part included the overture to Anacreon (Cherubini), a pianoforte duet, by Mr. Irons and Miss Calvert (so well played as to gain an encore), and a pianoforte solo by Mr. Irons, which received a similar compliment. Several vocal pieces were also given with marked success. The choir sang "O come unto the woods" (Smart), "Now the bright morning star" (Greville), "O hush thee my babie" (Sullivan), "Spirits advance" (Bishop), and "O hail us ye free" (Verdi), the last chorus being re-demanded.

STAPLEHURST.—Selections from Handel's Messiah formed the programme of a Concert, under the auspices of the Mutual Improvement Society, given on the 5th ult. at the Assembly Rooms. The solos and choruses were satisfactorily rendered and much appreciated. Mr. Hollands conducted, and Mr. H. Moren presided at the harmonium. Miss Ellen Glanville, the Misses Crawford, Mr. H. J. Hall, and Mr. Henry Pearson, were the principal vocalists; Mr. George Tolhurst assisted at the pianoforte.

ST. ANDREWS, FIFE.—The annual Concert of the St. Andrews Amateur Choral Society, which took place at the Town Hall on the 14th ult., was fully attended. Mendelssohn's Lobegesang, commencing from the "Adagio Religioso," was well performed, the solo parts being excellently given by Mrs. R. Mitchell, Miss Anna Farnie, and Mr. Salmond. The choruses were sung with remarkable precision and effect. The second part was miscellaneous, and solos were given with much success, Mrs. R. Mitchell, Mr. Salmond, and Mr. Bower Mitchell receiving in each of their songs enthusiastic and well-deserved applause. The conductor of the concert was, as usual, Mr. Salter, and the Lobegesang was played, arranged for four hands on the pianoforte, by Miss Paterson and Miss Anderson, with a harmonium part, performed by Mr. Richmond. In every respect this was one of the most successful concerts ever given by the Society.

ST. AUSTELL.—An excellent Concert was given on the evening of Monday, the 17th ult., by the Choral Society. The first part of the programme consisted of a duet, "The music of the birds," sung by the Misses Higman and Samwells (encored). A quartet "The ballad of the weaver," by Miss Perkins, Miss Hodge and Messrs. Brown and Jacobs, a trio for cornet, violin and piano, by Messrs. Heath, Baker, and Trembath, and a selection of unaccompanied part songs, "Neath the Abeles," "The rainy day," and "Round the Maypole," being very effective. The second part was devoted to Lahee's "Building of the Ship," the soloists being, Mrs. Ball, the Misses Samwells, Higman, Perkins, and Hodge, and Messrs. Holt, Brown, and Sandford. The choruses were given with much precision. Mr. E. Trembath was the pianist, Mr. Baker, first violin. Mr. Heath, presided at the harmonium, and Mr. H. Trembath Mus. Bac., conducted.

TEWKESBURY.—The Choral Society in this town still continues to work successfully and usefully; the Rev. C. W. Grove is the President, and the Society is patronised by the clergy and gentry of the neighbourhood. On the 13th ult., the second Concert of the season was given in the Music Hall, when most of the solos and choruses in the Messiah were creditably performed. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Corson, Mrs. J. G. Home, Miss Marsh, Miss M. Watson, Mr. Newman and Mr. J. Stoyle, Worcester. The band and chorus consisted of upwards of sixty performers. The pianoforte accompaniments of Miss Osborne were in suite as greatly to enhance the effect of the performance; and, under the efficient conductorship of Mr. J. T. Horniblow, the choruses were rendered with much precision.

THAME, OXON.—A Concert of sacred music was given in the Town Hall on Monday, the 3rd ult., by members of the Stokenchurch choir, assisted by friends in the neighbourhood. The programme, which consisted of selections from the works of Handel, Mozart, Fawcett and C. Ward, was well rendered, and appeared to give great satisfaction to the large audience assembled in the Hall. Conductor, Mr. John Youens.

TREHERBERT, SOUTH WALES.—The performance of Spohr's Oratorio, The Last Judgment, on the afternoon and evening of Thursday, the 13th ult., in the beautiful church erected by the Marquis of Bute, was eminently successful. The Oratorio was preceded by a short selection, from which we may particularly mention the air "But thou didst not leave" (Messiah), by Miss Forey; the Recit. and Air, "It is enough" (Elijah), by Mr. D. Morgan; and the choruses, "He watching over Israel," and "Be not afraid" (Elijah), all of which were exceedingly well rendered at the afternoon performance. In the Oratorio, the soprano and bass solos were ably given by Miss Forey and Mr. D. Morgan; and the tenor solos reflected great credit on Mr. A. Lewis. The choruses were rendered by the choir with remarkable precision, especially the concluding one, "Great and wonderful are all thy works." Mr. Crawshay's cyfarthfa string band rendered good service, and Miss Bell Morgan, though very young, presided at the organ with great ability. Mr. Griffith Jones (Caradog) was a thoroughly reliable conductor. The rendering of the whole of the music in the evening was equally successful; and on each occasion there was a crowded audience.

WARMINSTER.—The annual Invitation Concert given by the Grammar School took place on Easter Tuesday, when the Town Hall was crowded. The principal performers were, in addition to the School Choir—vocal, Mr. Kerningham, Lay Vicar of Salisbury Cathedral; Dr. Alcock, the head master; Mr. W. W. Alcock, the Rev. H. C. De St. Croix and Mr. George; instrumental, Mr. J. T. Calkin and Dr. Alcock, violins; Mr. Frank Spinney, viola; Mr. W. W. Alcock, violoncello; and Mr. Walter Spinney, piano. Haydn's 77th Quartett, for strings, and Bishop's "Chough and Crow" (with orchestral accompaniments) were highly appreciated. The programme was of a high class, and gave much satisfaction. We chronicle with pleasure Concerts of this kind, given by schools, as tending materially to foster in youth a love for the works of the great composers.

WENDOVER.—On the 11th ult., a Concert was given on behalf of the Literary Institution. The pieces selected were performed on the whole, with accuracy and ability. The choruses especially elicited the applause of the audience—"Now tramp o'er moss and fell" (Bishop), "What the bee is to the flow'ret" (Denning), and the "Soldiers' Chorus," from Gounod's Faust, being particularly well received. The songs, duets, etc., were effectively rendered, and two pieces for the pianoforte were also skilfully performed. Mr. Fleming conducted the concert, and Miss J. Holland acted as accompanist. The room was well filled.

WESTERHAM.—A fine organ, built by Lewis and Co., of Brixton, was inaugurated in the parish church, with full choral service, morning and evening, on Tuesday the 18th ult. The choir of the parish church, assisted by several ladies and gentlemen in the neighbourhood, and by Messrs. Lack and Rotton (basses), and Master Kinkee (soprano), of London numbered upwards of 50 voices. The choral service, used in the church for the first time, was exceedingly well executed. Mr. Kinkee ably presided at the organ. Mr. Bere, of St. Peter's, Eaton-square, also played several pieces with much effect. The organ, which is enclosed in an elaborately carved oak case, of chaste design, is the munificent gift of Lieut.-Colonel Warde, of Squerryes Court, Westerham, in memory of his father, the late Admiral Warde, K.H., and is in every respect a fine instrument.

WITHYHAM.—A Concert, under the direction of Mr. Pritchard, organist of the Parish Church, was given at the School-room, on the 12th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. Amongst the effective vocal pieces were the "Death of Nelson," and "My pretty Jane," by Mr. Pritchard (encored), and "Tenting on the old Camp Ground," by Mr. Garrett. "Children's Voices," well sung by Miss Barker, and the "Golden Past," by Mr. G. Moor. At the conclusion of the Concert, Earl De La Warr congratulated Mr. Pritchard, the able conductor, for bringing the Concert to such a successful issue, and spoke in the highest terms of the efficient state of the choir.

YEOVIL.—Mr. Loaring gave a morning and evening Concert, at the Town Hall, on Easter Tuesday. The programme included two overtures, "Haydn's Symphony," No. 1, flute solos by Dr. Walter and Mr. Simmons; a violin solo by Mr. Lambert Gore, and a pianoforte solo by M. Million. The symphony was admirably played by Messrs Loaring, Rumsey, Smith, Hewlett, Bennett and Dr. Walter, and fully appreciated by the audience. For the vocal portion of the programme Miss Ellen Glanville and Mr. Henry Taylor, lay vicar of Salisbury Cathedral were engaged. They both acquitted themselves admirably. The concert was quite successful.

"THE VILLAGE CHANT BOOK." A Collection of (72) Single, and (12) Double Chants, suitable for singing in unison or harmony.

N.B.—All passing notes, which are so obstructive to neat chanting, have been removed from these chants.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.

"..... Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services."..... they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.

"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Fowle's Musical Journal.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., or the Composer, Burnley.

Third Edition, enlarged. Reduced price 3d.

,, ,, ,, bound in scarlet cloth... ...	4s. 0d.

Novello's Editions of the Standard Sacred Works of the great masters have been so long before the public as to render any description of their merits as hand-books superfluous; but the fact of their having been selected by the Directors at each of the great Handel Festivals, may well be referred to as a proof of their extreme accuracy; and it will be seen that the publishers have spared neither expense nor trouble to identify these works with the Handel Festival, by printing, on each occasion, the miscellaneous selection of the second day precisely as it is performed.

It is particularly requested that visitors be careful to order Novello's Editions; as, although others may be offered for sale outside the Palace, none that do not bear their name as publishers, are authorised by the Directors.

From the Queen, April 22, 1871.

"The Organist's Quarterly Journal, edited by William Spark, Mus. Doc. (Novello, Ewer and Co.)—The 9th and 10th parts of this valuable and admirably sustained periodical are in our hands, and prove to contain as much and as varied new matter, and to be generally as interesting, as their predecessors. Part 9 at once breaks fresh ground by introducing us to Professor Graedener of Hamburg, whose Choral Prelude on the famous 'Ein feste Burg,' rendered so familiar to English ears by Meyerbeer in the 'Huguenots,' and by Mendelssohn in his Reformation Symphony, is a scholarly piece of writing in the contrapuntal school. Mr. W. F. Warner Jackson's Prelude in E flat is altogether another affair, and belongs to no particular school; this piece is not on an equality with most of the music written for the journal. Herr Tietz's simple Andante Sostenuto in G major, on the other hand, is unaffectedly graceful and pure in its style. Mr. Arthur Page's concluding Voluntary in B flat, a brilliant march and trio, is fairly written, but will better suit secular than sacred uses. A very clever piece by Herr Schwenke of Hamburg in A major, is called 'Trio' we presume because it is written in three pure parts throughout given to the right and left manuals and the pedals. This is a good exhibition of fluent contrapuntal writing. A brief Adagio in D, by Herr G. D. W. Osterholdt, also of Hamburg, is in a modern style, and a satisfactory example of its kind. C natural, by the bye, towards the close is good, but we are left in doubt as to where C sharp is resumed. The Fugue in G by Herr Otto Dienel, organist of St. Maria Berlin, is a capital piece of writing. The subjects are fresh and vigorous, the counterpoint flowing and natural, and the effect of the whole decidedly good. A smooth and nicely-conceived but not very original Andante in A by Mr. W. H. Barnett concludes this number. Part 10 opens with another ably-written Choral Prelude by Professor Graedner. The theme in this instance is the choral 'Ach Gott und Herr,' and the key B flat. Dr. Spark himself contributes an Introduction and Fughetta in E flat minor and major, which is so good as to make us desire that the fughetta had become a fugue. The introduction, with its massive harmony and its capital point of imitation, leads well up to the bright and vigorous fugal movement in the major key. The subject of this is highly characteristic, and its treatment excellent; the use of the full harmony—first in C minor—is in particular worthy of special mention; and we have only to regret the comparative brevity of the movement. Herr Osterholdt's Fantasia on the chorale, "Jesu meine Freunde," is a well-written if not highly attractive piece. Mr Inglis Bervon has an Andante in E major of very considerable merit. It is graceful music, and well calculated for the display of the instrument. Mr. G. J. Hill's exceedingly simple Andante in B flat has the same merits in a conspicuous degree; and Mr. W. J. Prichard's Andantino in A, with or without pedals, is quite beautiful, and, brief though it be, one of the choicest bits in the whole two parts. The last composition in this interesting collection is an Allegro Maestoso in D minor, by Mr. James Thomson—of Glasgow, we presume. Mr. Thomson would have done well to have essayed something simpler; we find him here a little overweighted. Dr. Spark, the judicious and most efficient editor of the Organist's Quarterly Journal, is to be highly congratulated on having laid before its subscribers so varied and, on the whole, admirable batch of music for the 'king of instruments.'"

HEMY'S ROYAL MODERN PIANOFORTE TUTOR. Price Five Shillings.

The Daily Telegraph of May 24th, speaking of this popular work, says:—

"If everybody having access to a piano be not a pianist, the reason lies elsewhere than in a want of instruction books. So many are these helps to efficiency, that it is hard to believe in a speciality for each; and, as a matter of fact, one very much resembles another. A distinction must be made, however, in favour of Mr. H. F. Hemy's 'Royal Modern Tutor,' which aims chiefly to pave a royal road to the art of counting time, and of properly connecting the parts for both hands. 'This the author trusts he has accomplished,' to quote his own words, 'by inserting the time figured between the treble and bass clef staves, and connecting the notes required to be played by each hand, and the mode of counting together—thus presenting the whole to the eye in so clear a form as to be intelligible to the youngest child learning music.' The plan is simple and ingenious, representing, perhaps, as much help as can be given in a difficult part of the student's course. In other respects, the book is one of merit. Its instructions are clear, and a proper graduation of the lessons is carefully observed. We should add that a new and well-got-up edition has been issued by Messrs. Metzler and Co."

A specimen copy sent post-free for 34 stamps.

MUSIC AT THE OPENING OF THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

By HENRY C. LUNN.

WHETHER a love for the highest class musical compositions is really progressing in this country may be open to doubt; but that the art itself is steadily taking its legitimate place in the affections of the people may be proved by the fact of its gradually assuming a greater importance in all ceremonials; the performance of works especially written for the occasion, in addition to those already established in public favour, being now regarded as almost a necessary portion of the programme. Considering how very much our International Exhibitions are subject to Court influence, and how large a proportion of the officials connected with the "State openings" of these undertakings have neither knowledge of nor sympathy with music, it is good to find not only that the art is recognised on these occasions, but that since 1851, when the "Hallelujah" chorus, from the "Messiah," and the National Anthem were considered as much as could be borne under the circumstances, composers of different countries have been invited to contribute works which should be in keeping with the object of the Exhibition by representing the varied styles of national music. It is true that ill-natured cavillers may affirm that all this has nothing whatever to do with artistic progress, and that the sole desire of those who arrange the incidents for the opening day is to get up a good show. It may be said that to see the Secretary of Her Majesty's Commissioners hand a paper to the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and then to see the Secretary of State for the Home Department hand it to the Prince of Wales is not in itself very exciting, even when His Royal Highness declares "the Exhibition open," an announcement conveyed to the "expectant multitude" outside by a flourish of trumpets and the firing of cannon: that to be face to face with the principal members of the Society of Arts (all who are entitled to such an honour being in imposing court costume), a number of perspiring Mayors, with their maces and swords of office, and many other representatives of the power and wisdom of the land, although very gratifying, can scarcely be considered sufficiently so for an entire morning's entertainment, and that therefore music must be called in as a popular additional attraction. But we must not allow such considerations to outweigh our sense of gratitude for the admission of the art into a scheme especially intended to exhibit the result of human genius and skill.

It being decided then that Music was to be represented at the inauguration of the Exhibition of 1871, the only question was where it was to be performed. Of course the Albert Hall was the legitimate place; but then if the State ceremony took place there, the Prince of Wales, who is so often spoken of in public as a warm patron of the art, could not very well escape before it commenced. It was remembered that Her Majesty, at the opening of the Albert Hall, although staying to hear Sir Michael Costa's Ode, was escorted to her carriage before the concert began; but it appeared that the Prince of Wales's engagements on the 1st of May would not allow of his remaining even to listen to the works expressly composed for the occasion; and the difficulty therefore was to provide for his exit with all the honours due to his station. Luckily the expedient suggested itself of shifting the ceremony into the conservatory in the Horticultural Gardens, and postponing the concert until three o'clock in the afternoon, so that all vestiges of court pageantry might disappear long before the music began. It is true that very few people could be packed into the conservatory, and many of those who were there would be unable to see what was going on, even by standing upon chairs or peeping through the flower-pots; but then the best had been done for those who could get into the building, the disappointed hundreds outside would be left to the tender mercies of the police, and in the Horticultural Gardens they could grumble without being heard. It certainly was a novelty in the history of such ceremonials to see the holders of season tickets totally unable to get near the place into which they naturally imagined they had purchased the right of admission—to see them bandied about from the Albert Hall to the Horticultural Gardens, from the north door to the south door, and eventually to find them wandering in the Gardens in that state of calm resignation which had evidently been looked forward to all day by the officials at the barriers as the inevitable result of over excitement, and consequently the most available time for luncheon.

We do not know who arranged the plan on which the programmes were printed for the concert at the Albert Hall, but the one which we borrowed from a neighbour (for none were to be procured, even when the music commenced) did not inform us who was to sing or what were the names of the two overtures to be performed. Relying upon our own acquaintance with the works, we ventured to remark to a lady at our side, in answer to an enquiring appeal, that the first overture was Weber's to "Der Freyschütz," but we were met by such an incredulous and scornful look that we did not again intrude our knowledge; and when, in pity for our ignorance on musical matters, she afterwards told us that Madame Conneau was Madlle. Titiens, we merely bowed in humble thankfulness for the information.

Let us at once say that the compositions of Signor Pinsuti, M. Gounod, Dr. Hiller and Mr. Sullivan, performed for the first time and presumed to represent Italian, French, German and English art, had scarcely any of the essential characteristics of the music of those countries: indeed we might almost affirm that, with the exception perhaps of Dr. Hiller's "Triumphal March," the composers appear to have studiously avoided writing in the style of the nation which gave them birth. For this of course we care nothing; for art is really of no country, and we infinitely preferred listening to the works as pure music, without reference to the object for which they were written; but we mention this at first in order to avoid any further allusion to the subject, and merely pause to express our opinion that if composers had been invited to send in their manuscript works, and a competent committee appointed to examine them and select the four best for performance, there would have been a much better chance of excellent results than can ever be achieved by the plan of first resolving upon holding an "International Exhibition of Musical Art," and then getting the specimens written to order.

After a very excellent performance of the overture to "Der Freyschütz," the effect of which was materially impaired by the reverberations in the building, which seem to defy all attempts at remedy, the first of the four new compositions, a Chorale, by the Chevalier Pinsuti, was given. So coldly was this work mentioned in the programme, neither the verses nor the name of their author being given, that it required stronger music than the composer has been inspired with to arouse the proverbial apathy of an audience at the commencement of a concert. A smooth Chorale, written in no particular school, but nicely voiced, and sung entirely without accompaniment, could scarcely give sufficient colour to the very clever and feeling poetry of Lord Houghton. Considering the suggestive nature of the stanzas, it seems strange that some sympathetic treatment of each verse wa not called up in the mind of the composer, the concluding lines commencing "Be this a Feast of Hope," especially, being eminently suited for musical requirements. The composition was well sung by the choir, and in its legitimate place at a choral concert, it would no doubt have fairly asserted itself as a musician-like part-song; but it suffered from the necessity of its being judged as one of the compositions representing national art, and its reception was anything but enthusiastic—a result no doubt partially attributable to the fact of the audience not having the slightest idea even of the subject of the text. The Chorale, like all the rest of the new works, was conducted by the composer.

The second place was assigned to M. Gounod's Motett, "Gallia," a work especially designed to represent the unhappy state of the country from which its composer is a voluntary exile. The first chapter of the Lamentations of Jeremiah has furnished a text most appropriate to the occasion, the parallel between the cities of Jerusalem and Paris being perfectly allowable, especially considering how very excellently the passages have been chosen for musical illustration. No more earnest outpouring of deep and heartfelt grief over the misfortunes of his native land could be spoken by the most eloquent orator than M. Gounod has here expressed in the language of his art; and when we record our opinion that in this work the composer has given utterance to higher thoughts than we have yet found in his sacred works, it will only afford one more proof of what we have so long felt—that, as in the instance of Mozart's Requiem, the more deeply an artist's sympathies are personally enlisted, the greater will be the result of his labours.

A short introduction, in E minor, in which the plaintive holding notes for the horns are a conspicuous feature, effectively prepares the hearer for the entry of the chorus, the mournful subject of which is increased by the sympathetic treatment of the orchestral parts, the syncopated accompaniment, which commences immediately before the voices, being continued throughout. The following soprano solo, combined occasionally with the chorus, has a pathetic and remarkably simple theme, in A minor, the instrumentation being in perfect keeping with the words, which express in calm and sorrowful language the fallen and desolate state of the city. After the close upon the dominant of the key, the chorus enters with good effect in C major, and the soprano solo, soaring above the choral part, gives much intensity to the words of lamentation and grief. The close of this chorus is finely interrupted by the horns simply giving out the original key-note; and a bold chorus, commencing with tenors and basses in unison, afterwards joined by the other voices in full harmony, is one of the most remarkable points in the work, the excessive richness of the instrumentation, in combination with the choir, materially aiding the grandeur of the effect. A beautiful contrast is now gained by the change to the tonic major, the soprano leading with an exquisite solo, "Jerusalem," to a triplet accompaniment of the stringed instruments, the organ being also most judiciously introduced, and this culminates in a final chorus, in which the whole resources of the orchestra (with the addition of six harps) are used with consummate skill and knowledge of effect. After the mournful and penitential character of the early part of the work, this bright and hopeful climax aroused the audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm; and both for the composition and the cause which it so nobly illustrated, M. Gounod was compelled to bow his acknowledgments before a storm of applause which did not subside until he answered to the recall which was too unanimous to be resisted. Madame Conneau sang the soprano solos with good feeling and judgment; but it required a finer voice to do full justice to the music. Frequent opportunities, however, will no doubt be given for hearing the composition efficiently performed; for there can be no question that the work will hold its ground long after the occasion for which it was written is forgotten.

Dr. Ferdinand Hiller next appeared as the representative of German music, his contribution being a "Grand March" an appropriate work through which to glorify the victorious deeds of his countrymen, and to herald the revival of art, after the many months of strife in which the nation has been engaged. Though perhaps not strikingly original, the bold and martial character of this composition, and the masterly manner in which it is instrumented will probably make it a popular work both here and in the composer's native land, where Marches, no doubt, will for some time to come be in constant request. The fresh and vigorous subject, which commences after a melodious introduction, is richly scored, the wind instruments, especially, being used with excellent effect. This is followed by what we presume for want of a better name, must be called a "Trio," in the dominant: the original theme is then resumed, and is succeeded by a second "Trio" in B flat major. The key of the piece (D major) is then approached by some highly effective modulations, and a prolonged dominant harmony prepares us for the re-entry of the first subject, the composition ending with a short but brilliant coda. The March was excellently performed; and the composer, both on entering and leaving the orchestra, was received with a cordiality which must have convinced him that his talents are as highly appreciated in this country as in the land of his birth.

Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Cantata "On Shore and Sea" has a subject well suited for local colouring; but, as it appears to us, curiously inappropriate for the exponent of English music to choose. It is true that, supposing it good to glorify the blessings of peace by showing us the horrors of war, "national susceptibilities and painful associations" are avoided (as the author tells us) by throwing the action back to the sixteenth century, and the scene to "a port of the Riviera, near Genoa, and on board of a Genoese and a Moorish Galley at sea;" but we can scarcely see why a truly English subject should not have been selected for the occasion, in which any allusion to the recent continental strife should have been especially guarded against. All this has, however, nothing whatever to do with Mr. Sullivan's work as a musical composition; and it must be remembered that it is by this standard alone that it will be judged at future performances, when all the surroundings of the International Exhibition will have been either forgotten or disregarded. The libretto, which relates to the loves of a Genoese sailor, Il Marinajo, and a Riviera woman, La Sposina, is well written by Tom Taylor, the verses being excellently suited for variety of musical expression. The chorus of sailors, with which the work opens, is highly dramatic, and based upon a subject full of character, the effect of which is much strengthened by the flowing triplet accompaniment, and that picturesque treatment of the orchestra of which the composer has given us so many instances in his previous works. After a recitative and air for Il Marinajo, supposed to be sung on board the Galley, in sorrow for the parting with his betrothed (a clever composition, with which a chorus of sailors is skilfully combined) a well written recitative for La Sposina occurs, preceded by a characteristic instrumental introduction, and this is followed by a melodious air most delicately and sympathetically instrumented, the chorus of women at the conclusion being highly effective. As Mr. Sullivan has no doubt studied the matter more than we have, the subject of the "Moresque," No. 5, may be fairly accepted as "Moorish": at all events it is full of character, the continuous use of the minor sixth in the major scale, especially when it moves upwards to the leading note, giving an indescribably novel sensation to the civilised musical ear. The "Chorus of Moslem Triumph" also contains some peculiar effects, which however must not be condemned because they are daring: it must be remembered that this is a Call to Prayer, the words being untranslated; and here, therefore, more than in any number throughout the work, the true nature of this barbaric music should be preserved. A chorus of Christian captives, and an effective duet for the lovers, who are now re-united, lead to the final chorus, which is exceedingly bold and vigorous, the orchestra and organ being well employed in heightening the climax of a work which is evidently the result of careful and matured thought. The applause at the conclusion of the performance must have been highly gratifying to the composer, who conducted throughout with his accustomed skill, and had the satisfaction of feeling that both band and choir worked with an earnest will to ensure him the success he deserved. The solo parts were efficiently sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Winn—no names, however, as we have already mentioned, being announced in the printed programme.

At the end of the Cantata Sir Michael Costa, whose services had only been required to direct the opening overture, re-appeared in the orchestra to conduct the overture to "Semiramide," which was played with much energy and precision, and loudly applauded. Then came the National Anthem, "by the chorus and audience," as stated in the programme (the chorus appealing to the ear and the audience to the eye) and this brought the musical portion of the proceedings of the day to a worthy close.

In the account of the principal characteristics of the present Exhibition, which accompanies the "Official Programme," it is expressly stated that, instead of adopting the former method of keeping the works of one country distinct from another, the plan has been carried out of placing individual objects all together, so that the quality, apart from the nationality, of the articles, can be fairly examined. This is precisely what we have already partially hinted at in our remarks upon the musical compositions selected for the opening day. We do not want the art of any particular country, but the art of the world; and to this end open competition should have been encouraged, not only on the first day, but as long as the Exhibition remains open. Works approved of should be effectively performed, as objects are carefully exhibited, and some faith might then be put in the assertion of Her Majesty's Commissioners that Music is really to be admitted, in common with other artistic productions, at the Exhibition. Very many of the names connected with the musical department of this national undertaking do not instil much respect in the minds of the well-wishers to the cause; and we can scarcely imagine that this feeling will be removed when it is found that the much vaunted "daily exhibition of musical art," is chiefly represented by well worn overtures, arrangements of songs, and scraps from the popular operas, performed by military bands to a few stragglers in the Albert Hall.

ORATORIO—ITS PLACE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

WE have of late had our attention called to the subject of Oratorio in its lowest and in its highest type. Earnest gentlemen have been crowding over to a little German town, to witness a true miracle play, rousing our curiosity by minute accounts—in which, by the bye, reasons why modern Englishmen should not be shocked by particular impersonations take up suspiciously large room—kindly giving route and expense list, showing to one halfpenny how we can share with them the privilege of witnessing sacred history so vividly portrayed. And an English cathedral has lately echoed to the awfully solemn strains, in which the greatest musical mind the world ever saw, has set forth the Passion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ: and this too, not as a concert—no ticketed seats, no fussy stewards, no smartly-dressed Sopranos, no babblings about pretty music, no saying of soft things to lady listeners, and all in the house of God—but as a solemn message to souls—a cry to them to hear the Saviour's own awful appeal: "Behold and see if there be any sorrow like unto My sorrow."

That there was a something moving to good, even in the uncouth German representation, we must believe on the word of our English witnesses; that there was something that bowed down the inner soul in awestruck adoration, in that Westminster Abbey Passion music, the testimony of hundreds who were privileged to hear it most surely proves. Here, then, in Oratorio—Sacred History illustrated by Art, as we may define it, we find an acknowledged power of moving souls aright—of quickening them to a sense of the reality of God's truth.

Can we possibly use this power generally and systematically? This must surely be a thought most fit for these days of irreverence and faithlessness.

Let us fairly understand this—that Oratorio music is not Anthem music. Doubtless we may with advantage use selected passages of Oratorios as anthems, just as we may profitably read a chapter out of Kings giving us an episode in the life of Elijah, but it is continuity and development that give the special power to Oratorio; and large consecutive portions, if not the whole, must be performed, if full advantage is to be reaped for the listeners' minds. We may state plainly then, that if Oratorio is to be generally adopted in the Church of England as an acknowledged means of moving men's hearts to holy thought, length alone will prohibit its use in connection with the ordinary services of the Church. On special occasions the two may be united, as at the great Westminster Abbey service; but generally the Oratorio, if adopted at all, must be adopted separately from and independently of the ordinary services.

And is such a suggestion quite novel to Church of England custom? Let us see. There are ancient churches still—in spite of the furor of restoration—that can show the old chain that once kept the great Bible to its place. Cathedrals have their stone shelves to show, reminding us of those days when within the Church itself, out of service time, the best reader, with all the oratory at his command, read out God's Word to those who could not read for themselves, or possessed no copy of the precious book. This is exactly and precisely what we want now—a reading out of God's Word, within the Church, out of service time, with all the oratory we can command; that is in music, for music is our highest oratory. A slight shadow of some uncertain rubric "all the service or none," seems to flit across the writer's page. Does this same shadow fall on the minds of the stewards of the Cathedral Concerts of Gloucester or Hereford; if not it might not affect a solemn reading of the Bible in York or Durham.

Now a word or two on the practical carrying out of the suggestion. For times—the needful preparation, besides possibly other considerations, would prevent such high readings from coming very often. Let us say then on red-letter saints' days, all, or certain of them,—where practicable, the Oratorio might be a reading for the day. For performers—the choir of the cathedral or church, assisted by such singers of the neighbourhood as, being willing, might be passed as efficient, and who would pledge themselves to be duly prepared. It must be well understood, no congregational singer's rights should be allowed to interfere with obtaining the very best reading practicable. "But would people go to hear solos from such local singers, now that railways take the first singers of the day into every corner of the land?" Gentle objector—firstly, we do not project a concert in church; and secondly, there is a wonderful balance in this world extending even to singers and listeners, as is the choir so is the congregation—as a rule a congregation only appreciates music up to their choir's performance. If they did they would push up the choir. In a country church a Sims Reeves would scarcely, if at all, be held in higher esteem than the native tenor-singing butcher.

If the hearts and wills and feelings only be there, needful materials for sufficient performance will not be far to seek.

"But, after all, are you not simply planning saints'-day concerts for the people? Would not the mass of listeners only go for the music, as music, without one thought of spiritual improvement?" Of course they would, as surely (but no more surely) as the mass of people go to church now, for just anything whatsoever, but to say their prayers. But you would not shut up the church, would you, because so many went there merely for amusement? Man can only follow out the likeliest way of moving hearts; he may sow, God only can give the increase. And yet, who can say how many hearts might be touched to spiritual profit by the earnest, loving, burning tones of a Mendelssohn, for instance, telling, in the words of Scripture itself, the triumphs of the good man's faith, and that amidst the hallowing influences and associations of God's own house. Who can say into how many hearts might thus be laid up a store of blessed words of comfort, to be drawn forth, and lived upon, in the dark hours of sorrow and sickness. Are there such things as talents committed to churches—talents of art, to be used for the influencing of hearts and to the saving of souls. Yes, architecture is thus nobly used, thank God. Go through the length and breadth of the land and you shall see well nigh all that is glorious in the architect's craft rightly given to the service of God, and the good of men's souls. But how with music? Are the greatest triumphs of that the greatest art thus too used? No; where is Oratorio?—banished to the concert hall, with all its holy words, sent not to move hearts, but to tickle ears. Let us be consistent—hold our cathedral services in our concert halls—or bring our Oratorios within the walls of our cathedrals.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

In addition to the appearance of Madame Adelina Patti in most of her favourite characters, on Friday the 12th ult. she added one more to her long list of brilliant successes by her performance of Desdemona, in Rossini's "Otello"—an assumption so absolutely perfect, both in a vocal and histrionic sense, as to give new life to a work which, as a tragic Opera, can never take high rank on its own merits. The impression created by Madame Patti was indeed such as we rarely witness in our Opera houses: in the trio, "Ti parli l'amore," the expressive "L'error d'un infelice," the well known Willow-song, and the prayer, "Deh! calma o ciel," she proved herself so consummate a mistress both of the deepest pathos and the most brilliant executive power that the enthusiasm of the audience could scarcely be restrained, and she was rewarded by the loudest expressions of approval both during her performance and at the close of the acts. Signor Mongini was, as usual, a demonstrative Otello, his fine voice, however, compensating with many of the audience for his defects of style; and his exertions called forth much and frequent applause, especially in the solo, "L'ira d'avverso fato," in which his high chest notes (reaching to C sharp) were wonderfully effective. The début of Madame Fabbri as Donna Anna, in "Don Giovanni," must also be recorded. She sings well in the middle part of her register, but her high notes want quality. She was however favourably received, and will no doubt, from her many artistic qualities, be acceptable in many parts. Signor Mario is gradually working his way through the most popular of his characters, and is listened to and applauded as so old a favourite deserves to be. His Don Ottavio, in "Don Giovanni," is we think now his best part.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The chief event at this establishment during the past month has been the unqualified success of Madlle. Marie Marimon, who made her début on the 3rd ult., in the character of Amina, in "La Sonnambula." Many might have questioned the policy of an entirely unknown artist appearing for the first time in this country in a part so associated with the successes of innumerable predecessors, but Madlle. Marimon was evidently conscious of her strength, and achieved a triumph all the more honourable to her from the difficulty of her self imposed task. With a soprano voice of exquisite purity, a delicacy of vocalisation, an accuracy of intonation and the most facile execution, it is scarcely to be wondered at that, even with a proverbially cold audience, she gradually asserted her power. Throughout the Opera her singing was instinct with intelligence and true musical feeling; and even the most passionless critic could not detect a flaw in her many daring cadenzas. Her acting, too, although thoroughly French, was carefully subdued to the feeling of the part, and we have little doubt that in characters where she can give freer scope to her histrionic qualifications, she will leave nothing to be desired. After her brilliant execution of the finale, "Ah non giunge," the applause was enthusiastic and unanimous, and Madlle. Marimon was compelled to appear three times before the curtain to receive the renewed congratulations of her admirers. We are sorry that the debutante had not a better Elvino. Signor Fancelli sang well in parts, but in the love scenes he was hard and unreal, and the voices had not that sympathetic ring which is the soul of Italian music. Signor Agnesi seemed scarcely at ease in the part of the Count, and Signor Casaboni was only a respectable Alessio. The orchestra, under the excellent direction of Sir Michael Costa, was remarkably efficient, the accompaniments being played throughout with the utmost delicacy and refinement; but the chorus was coarse and out of tune, in many portions of the Opera actually marring the general effect of the scene. The revival of Gounod's "Faust" enabled Madlle. Léon Duval to make a favourable impression both as an actress and singer, although she can scarcely be pronounced equal to the execution of the music of such an exacting part as Margherita. Signor Nicolini achieved a marked success as Faust, and has since appeared with even greater effect as Raoul in the "Huguenots." Signor Sparapani may also be mentioned as a reliable baritone his Valentino in "Faust" having many points worthy of commendation. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon the continued success of Madlle. Titiens as Leonora in Beethoven's "Fidelio"; but we may say that her assumption of the part is this year finer than ever. For general excellence in the cast, this Opera stands first amongst the works given this season.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

The last of the series of these excellent concerts for the present season was given at St. James's Hall on the 5th ult., when Beethoven's Mass in D and the same composer's Choral Symphony were performed. The presentation of Beethoven's colossal Mass at the Oratorio Concerts last year, when it was given, for the first time in this country without alteration or curtailment, has so thoroughly inspired the musical public with confidence in the power and efficiency of Mr. Joseph Barnby's Choir that a repetition of the work was looked forward to with the utmost interest; and when we say that in every respect the second performance showed a marked improvement upon the first, we are certain that we are but recording the opinion of all those present who were competent to judge. The sublime grandeur of the choral portions of the Mass seemed so thoroughly felt by every singer engaged in its interpretation that their extreme intricacy and difficulty never obtruded itself to the detriment of the general effect; and at the end of the several movements the applause was enthusiastic and sincere. The "Gloria" was given with wondrous decision; the solemnity of the "Agnus Dei" made itself felt by every hearer; the "Benedictus" was sung with a heavenly calmness most truly in sympathy with the feeling of the movement, and in the more abstruse parts—especially throughout the latter portion of the "Et vitam venturi"—the precision with which the points were attacked was indeed remarkable. The solo vocalists were Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Madame Patey, Mr. Lloyd and Herr Carl Stepan, all of whom acquitted themselves of their arduous task with the utmost credit. Madame de Wilhorst, although we should imagine but little accustomed to the interpretation of sacred music, sang with much earnestness and good expression; and, especially in the "Benedictus," her upper notes were heard to much advantage. Madame Patey was, as usual, thoroughly satisfactory in the contralto part; Mr. Lloyd's sympathetic voice and refined style told throughout the concerted music with good effect, and Herr Stepan sang with all the enthusiasm of a true lover of his art. The orchestra was everything that could be desired; and the violin obbligato to the "Benedictus" was so exquisitely played by Mr. Carrodus as to elicit marked applause. The Choral Symphony went excellently throughout. The whole of the instrumental movements were performed with extraordinary precision and truth of expression, and the choral portion—in spite of the exertions of the choir in the Mass—was sung with remarkable vigour. The principal parts were given by the vocalists already mentioned, the opening recitative being well declaimed by Herr Stepan, and the tenor solo being sung with much effect by Mr. Lloyd. Mr. Joseph Barnby conducted with that care and judgment which he has displayed from the commencement of his career before the public, and by the exercise of which, both at rehearsals and performances, he has already produced results which cannot be too highly estimated by those who desire the progress of real art in this country. The organ was, as usual, most efficiently played by Mr. F. A. W. Docker.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert of the season introduced Madlle. Brandes, a very young pianist, who performed Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor with a perfection of mechanism which augurs well for her future career, when the powers which she evidently possesses shall have become ripened by age and experience. The Symphonies were Haydn's in D, No. 7, and Spohr's in D minor, both of which, under the able direction of Mr. Cusins, were well played. Madame Monbelli and Signor Delle Sedie were the vocalists, the lady giving "Batti, batti," and the Jewel Song from Gounod's "Faust," with excellent effect. At the fourth concert on the 8th ult., an interesting feature in the programme was the "Concerto grosso," in G minor, of Handel, which was excellently played, and pleased so much, in spite of the antiquated character inseparable from this class of music, that we could not but wonder how it is that these compositions (if even only as choice specimens of the works of a past age) should be so rarely presented before a modern audience. Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto in A minor was finely performed by Madame Szarvady, who was greeted at the conclusion by the warmest applause; and Signor Bottesini also produced a marked effect in a Concerto of his own composition on the Contra Basso. Besides Beethoven's Symphony in F, and Mendelssohn's Overture to "Ruy Blas," the orchestral pieces included Auber's capital "Exhibition" March, a composition deserving of being more frequently heard, although we cannot understand why it should be called a "March." The vocalists were Madlle. Regan and Herr Jules Stockhausen.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The 133rd anniversary Festival of this excellent Charity was held at the Freemasons' Hall on the 28th April, under the presidency of Sir Sterndale Bennett. As this was the first time, we believe, in the history of the Society that the chair had been occupied by a member of the musical profession, it may be inferred that an unusual number of artists assembled on the occasion, the interest of the event we have mentioned being materially enhanced by the chairman being a member of the Institution, a recent recipient of Royal favour, and a Professor universally respected and esteemed, as well for his social worth as for his artistic acquirements. After the usual routine toasts had been disposed of, Sir Sterndale Bennett, in a speech as remarkable for its earnestness as for its modesty, proposed "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians," eloquently dwelling upon the necessity of increasing the funds of the Institution to meet the pressing demands of the claimants, and speaking, from his own experience, of the excellent manner in which the affairs of the Society were uniformly managed. The toast, "The Patrons and Honorary Subscribers," was ably responded to by Sir John Pakington, and the health of the chairman was proposed by Sir Thomas Gladstone. The musical arrangements were unusually good, one of the most interesting features of the concert being the introduction of eighteen young ladies of the Royal Academy of Music, who sang the chamber trio, "Rest thee on this mossy pillow" (H. Smart) and the Spinning Chorus from Wagner's "L'Olandese dannato," with so much refinement and musicianlike feeling as to receive encores for both compositions, the effect being greatly aided by the very excellent pianoforte accompaniment of Mr. W. H. Eyers. The solo vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. E. Lloyd and Signor Delle Sedie; and the instrumentalists Madme. Szarvady (pianoforte) and Mr. Carrodus (violin) all of whom received unanimous applause, Miss Wynne and Mr. Lloyd being compelled to repeat their songs. The glee singing was under the experienced direction of Mr. James Coward, and the vocal solos were efficiently accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. C. E. Stephens. The subscriptions, which were announced by the Hon. Treasurer, amounted to the unusually large sum of £440.

The programme of arrangements for the Handel Festival, to be held at the Crystal Palace during the present month, is now published. So great has been the success of the "Selection day" on former occasions that it has been resolved to continue this plan at the present Festival; and we are glad to find that, although the full programme is not yet announced, the "Dettingen Te Deum" and one of Handel's organ concertos will form a portion of the performance on that day. The "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt" are the two Oratorios to be given on the first and third day, the "Selection" morning as heretofore, coming between. The band and chorus will be on the same scale of magnitude as in 1868, and under the experienced direction, it is almost needless to say, of Sir Michael Costa. The general Rehearsal takes place on the 16th Inst. and the Performances on Monday the 19th, Wednesday the 21st, and Friday the 23rd Inst.

The death of Auber, the composer, which occurred in Paris during the past month, at the advanced age of 89, has removed from us one of the most perfect representatives of the French school of operatic art that ever existed. Not only did he possess in an eminent degree the rare gift of melody, but his artistic qualities had been so highly cultivated that his works appealed with an irresistible power to the musical as well as the unmusical hearers; and although occasionally slightly influenced by some of his great contemporaries in creative art—more especially Rossini—he always retained an individuality of style which is the surest sign of genius. "La Muette de Portici," "Fra Diavolo," and "Le Domino noir" may perhaps be cited as the most popular and fascinating of his operas; but we might print a long catalogue of his works containing gems which the world will not willingly allow to die. That until the last year or two he retained not only the will but the power to produce new compositions is proved by his excellent Overture written for the opening of the London International Exhibition of 1862, and also by his opera "Le premier Jour de Bonheur," performed for the first time in February 1868.

On the 28th April Mr. Henry Leslie's Oratorio "Immanuel," which has not been heard in London for some years, was performed at St. James's Hall, the principal parts being sustained by Madlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Maas, and Mr Lewis Thomas. All the solos were excellently given, Madame Patey in the Widow's song, and Mr. Sims Reeves in the air "Father, I have sinned," especially creating a marked effect upon the audience. The Trio "Come we pray" sung by Masters Kennett, Stewart, and Goold (of Westminster Abbey) was unanimously encored, and the choruses, given throughout with much precision and effect, were greatly applauded. There was a good attendance, and the work was conducted by the composer with his usual ability.

The third of the series of concerts given by the Welsh Choral Union took place at the Concert Hall, Store Street, on the 1st ult., under the direction of Mr. John Thomas. The choruses were, as usual, sung with remarkable decision, and elicited unqualified marks of approbation. The principal vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds and the Sisters Doria; and the instrumentalists Miss Stone (pianoforte) Signor Scuderi (violin) and Mrs. Henry Davies and Mr. John Thomas (harp) all of whom were highly effective, Mr. Thomas's Duet for two harps, on Welsh melodies, being received with well deserved applause. These concerts are in every respect excellently conducted, and appear to be rapidly increasing in attraction.

Mr. Walter Macfarren gave the first of three Matinées at the Hanover Square Rooms on Saturday morning the 6th ult. The programme was exceedingly interesting; and, although appealing especially to the lovers of classical works, contained sufficient variety to give thorough satisfaction to a mixed audience. The most interesting novelty was a MS. Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin by Mr. G. A. Macfarren (excellently played by the concert giver and Mr. Henry Holmes), which was received with much applause, the slow movement especially pleasing, from the attractiveness of the theme and the excellent and musicianlike manner in which it is treated. The pianoforte performance of Mr. Walter Macfarren was instinct with that grace and elegance without which the most facile execution fails to make itself felt by the audience; and the versatility of his style was sufficiently tested by the works which he selected to appear in—Beethoven's Sonata in G minor, for pianoforte and violoncello, and Mendelssohn's Quartet in B minor (in addition to the Sonata already mentioned) with some lighter pieces of his own composition, including a most effective duet, "Andante and Bolero" (in which he was joined by Mr. Stephen Kemp) a Nocturne called "Twilight," and a charming sketch entitled the "Morning Song." Two sacred songs by Mr. Walter Macfarren were sung with much expression by that rising young vocalist Miss Goode, and Miss Dalmaine was equally effective in her vocal contributions. The instrumentalists who lent their assistance on the occasion were Mr. Henry Holmes (violin), who played with excellent effect a quaint "Andante e allegretto," by Handel, Mr. Burnett (viola) and Herr Daubert (violoncello). The vocal music was ably accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Stephen Kemp.

Sigismond Thalberg, whose decease has recently taken place in Naples, was not only a pianist of remarkable powers, but his compositions for the instrument have had a powerful effect upon the modern school of fantasia writers. The manner in which he could make his fingers sing a melody, whilst surrounding it with the most brilliant ornaments distributed over the entire keyboard, created as much astonishment as delight both with musical and non-musical listeners; but we can scarcely say that the influence of his works has been beneficial to the art. It should, however, be recorded that he had a most refined touch; and, although he chiefly devoted himself to the interpretation of his own compositions, we can ourselves affirm that he performed the most classical works with exquisite finish, and with all the conscientiousness of a thorough artist. Although the composer of two operas, one of which was produced in London, it is only as a pianist and writer for his instrument that the name of Thalberg will be known in the history of the art.

ON the 29th April a morning concert was given by the Misses Ferrari at the Hanover Square Rooms before a large and fashionable audience. The excellent voice and style of Miss Sophie Ferrari were conspicuously displayed in the air "Plaisir du rang suprême," from Auber's "Masaniello," and in a song by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the young artist receiving, as she deserved, the warmest and most encouraging applause. The sisters were also eminently successful in two duets—"Prenderò quel Brunettino," from "Cosi Fan tutte," and "In the deep ravine" from "The Crown Diamonds"—both of which were well selected to test most severely their vocal powers before a public audience. In the "Spinning-wheel" Quartet from "Martha," (in which they were joined by Signor Gardoni and Herr Stockhausen), they were equally effective; and Miss Sophie Ferrari was also heard to much advantage in Signor Randegger's trio, "I Naviganti," and in a duet, with Signor Gardoni, from Gounod's "Philemon et Baucis." The interest excited by this being the first appeal for public judgment from the daughters of a professor so eminent and respected as the late Signor Ferrari was however not the only attraction, for the concert was intrinsically a thoroughly good one. Mrs. Sicklemore (a pupil of Madame Ferrari) evinced much talent in Gordigiani's "Tutti I Sabati," and Madame Patey, Signor Gardoni, and Herr Stockhausen, also gave vocal solos with unqualified success. The instrumentalists were Mr. W. G. Cusins and Herr Pauer (pianoforte) Mr. Henry Holmes (violin) Signor Piatti (violoncello) and Mr. Lazarus (clarionet) all of whom were received with the utmost favour. The vocal music was excellently accompanied on the pianoforte by Signor Randegger and Mr. H. C. Deacon.

THE annual performance of Handel's "Messiah," for the benefit of the Royal Society of Musicians, was given on the 12th ult., at St. James's Hall, under the able conductorship of Mr. W. G. Cusins. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Sophie Ferrari, Miss Marion Severn, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Patey, and Mr. Maybrick, all of whom it is needless to say were thoroughly efficient in the music allotted to them. There was an excellent orchestra, led by Mr. J. T. Willy, and a well selected chorus. The room was very full.

MR. E. SILAS gave an evening concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 17th ult., when a highly attractive programme of chamber music was provided. The concert opened with Rubinstein's Sonata (Op. 18) for pianoforte and violoncello, finely played by Messrs. Silas and Pezze; and the concerted piece in the second part was a trio by Mr. Silas (Op. 27) for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, given with true musical feeling and executive power by the composer, Messrs. Henry Holmes and Pezze. There is so much good writing in this trio that we cannot but wonder how it happens that Mr. Silas's works are not oftener played in public, especially when we hear of concerts solely devoted to "modern music," and perceive that this clever composition is numbered "Op. 27." During the evening Mr. Silas contributed two lighter pieces of his own, the second of which, a spirited Bourrée, pleased so much as narrowly to escape an encore. He also played, with Madame Silas, some variations on an original subject by F. Schubert, at the termination of which both performers received the most enthusiastic and deserved applause, and concluded the concert with Rubinstein's Melody in F, and Paganini's "Caprice," arranged as a study for the piano by R. Schumann. A graceful Andante, for the violin by Mr. Silas was played with much expression by Mr. Henry Holmes, and vocal solos were given by Madlle. Drasdil, Miss Maude Seymour (who was much applauded in an effective song by the concert-giver, to words by T. Moore) and Mr. Leonce Waldeck.

THE Anniversary Meeting of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read was held in the Hanover Square Rooms on the 4th ult., the chair being occupied by Prince Teck. A very excellent performance of vocal and instrumental music was given by the pupils, Bach's Motett "I wrestle and pray," a selection from Haydn's "Creation," and two organ solos being amongst the most prominent pieces in the programme. Too much praise cannot be given to Mr. Edwin Barnes, the Professor of Music at the Society's schools, whose indefatigable exertions in training the students have for so many years produced such excellent results, and whose artistic taste has always led him to cultivate the minds of his pupils to a real love for the works of the greatest masters. A second concert was given at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park on the 12th ult., the first part being devoted to sacred and the second to secular compositions. The whole of the pieces—including an interesting selection from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul"—were most successfully rendered by the blind pupils, under the skilful direction of Mr. Barnes.

THE 217th Anniversary Festival of the Sons of the Clergy was held in St. Paul's Cathedral on Wednesday, the 10th ult., when a large congregation assembled. The Prayers were intoned by the Rev. J. H. Coward, and the Lessons were read by the Rev. B. M. Cowie. There was, as usual, a full choral service, conducted by Mr. Winn. The Suffrages were sung to Tallis's "Festival use," and the Psalms were chanted to Attwood in E flat. Mr. Henry Gadsby composed a new service for the occasion, which was excellently sung, and will no doubt take its place amongst the best specimens of modern sacred music. The anthems were Dr. Croft's "God is gone up," Goss's "The glory of the Lord," and the solo and chorus "Blessing and honour and glory," from Spohr's "Last Judgment," the solo parts most efficiently sung by Mr. Kerr Gedge. The music was under the able direction of Mr. John Goss, assisted by Mr. George Cooper.

THE members of Mr. Searle's Choir gave an "Invitation Night" on Friday, the 28th April, at the Portland Rooms, Foley Street, before a large audience. Novello's "Like as the hart," for quartet and chorus, and Arcadelt's "Ave Maria," in the sacred part, and Barnby's "Silent night," Sullivan's "O hush thee my babie," Stevens' "From Oberon in fairy land," Weber's "Gipsy Chorus" and Rossini's "Carnovale," in the secular part, were the most successful amongst the choral pieces. The "Three Chafers" was effectively sung as a double quartet, and Bishop's "Mynheer Van Dunck" was well rendered by Messrs. Jackson, Bromhall, and Searle. Mr. J. Bromhall, Miss Searle and Miss Shepperson were highly appreciated in their solos, each receiving an enthusiastic encore. The Andante for piano and violin, from Mozart's 14th Sonata, was played with much taste and precision by Miss Thornton and Mr. F. Thornton. Miss Thornton also performed a fantasia, "Christmas Rejoicings," and made a most efficient accompanist. Mr. E. W. Searle conducted.

ON Friday, the 12th ult., the Quaver Choral Society gave a concert in aid of the Church Schoolmasters' and Schoolmistresses Benevolent Institution, at the Infants' School-room, Bishopsgate Church-yard, Bishopsgate Street Within, assisted by Mrs. E. Bernard, Mrs. Bicknell, Mrs. Harvey, Miss Butterworth, Messrs. F. H. Cousens, E. Bernard, Baker, J. and C. Youngs and Harvey; Conductor, Mr. W. Bicknell. Miss E Malivoire and F. H. Cousens presided at the pianoforte. The programme consisted of a selection of sacred and secular music. The concert was very successful, the choruses being so well rendered as to reflect great credit upon the conductor, and the solos being also given with much expression and taste. There was a large audience.

A CONCERT was given on Monday, the 6th ult., by the choir of St. Peter's, Walworth, under the direction of Mr. J. Payne. The following artists were engaged: Miss Adelaide Bliss, Miss Rosina Houghton, Mr. Brewster and Mr. J. B. Bolton. The programme included a selection from Mendelssohn's "Elijah," which was very well received. Miss Houghton was encored in the air, "O rest in the Lord." Mr. Bolton sang the bass music with much effect (the air "It is enough," being given with excellent expression); and Miss Bliss in "Hear ye, Israel," and Mr. Brewster in "If with all your hearts," were thoroughly efficient. The second part consisted of secular selections, in which Miss Bliss was highly successful. Mr. Sydney Cozens was a careful accompanist.

THE members of the Greville Choral Society gave a performance of sacred music in Junction Road Church, Holloway, on the 25th April. The first part included Mendelssohn's Overture in C, and the same composer's "Hear my prayer." One of the most effective solos was, "Entreat me not," from Chipp's "Naomi," by Mrs. Sharp. The second part consisted of a selection from the "Messiah." Mr. Robertson in "Comfort ye," was much applauded, and an encore was demanded for Mrs. Sharp in "Rejoice greatly." The choruses were given with much precision (especially the "Hallelujah" and "Amen"), and reflected the utmost credit upon the honorary conductor, Mr. Sharp. The accompaniments were well played by Mr. Byrom (piano) and Mr. Marsden (harmonium).

MISS CHARLOTTE JAMES, assisted by Herr Lehmeyer, pianist, and other artists, gave a concert at Camberwell, on the 27th April. Messrs. Clive, Veroni, Gauney and Baker Scott were well received, the latter gentleman earning much applause. The ladies were Miss Blanche Reives, Madlle. de Villiers and a lady not named, all of whom were highly successful.

A MOST successful Amateur Concert was given at the School-rooms of Holy Trinity, Upper Chelsea, on Wednesday, the 26th April, for the purpose of establishing a Society for the Promotion of Window Gardening among the Poor of the Parish. The programme was a most attractive and appropriate one, and was effectively given by about twelve members of the Chelsea Choral Society. The choral music was exceedingly well rendered, and the most successful of the solos were, "When the quiet moon," "Twilight is darkening," and "The Rose" (composed for the occasion by Alex. Cooper), which latter, being sung with great spirit, was rapturously encored. The concert was well attended, and realized a considerable sum in favour of the new Society.

A VERY successful concert, under the direction of Mr. Stedman, was given at the Birkbeck Institution on the 17th ult. Miss Beryl, who sang in place of Miss Chatfield (absent from indisposition), displayed a good voice, and was warmly received; Miss Annie Sinclair, in the scena, "Ah fors é lui," elicited the most enthusiastic applause, and Madame Poole obtained an encore for her excellent rendering of Henry Smart's "Lady of the Lea." Mr. Cooke, in "Ring on, sweet Angelus," and Mr. G. S. Smith, in Dr. Stainer's fine new song, "Loyal death," were highly successful, and Mr. Stedman, of whose sympathetic voice and excellent style we have before spoken, gave "She wore a wreath of roses," and "Tom Bowling" with so much effect as to win for the former an unanimous encore. A word of praise is due to Mr. Henry Parker, who accompanied throughout the evening with much skill, and also performed with good expression and executive power Liszt's Fantasia on "Lucia di Lammermoor," and a composition of his own, called the "Fairy Harp."

THE thirty-first and last concert of the season, in aid of the Victoria Hospital for Sick Children, was held in the Pimlico-rooms on Monday, 22nd ult. The principal performers were Miss Huder, Miss Wydford and Miss Franklin, Messrs. Hall, Milne and Kellick; Clarionet, Mr. J. H. Hallett, R.A.M.; Piano, Mr. G. W. Hallett, R.A.M., and Miss Marie Ford. Miss Wydford, although suffering from severe indisposition, sang with much effect, and Miss Huder was deservedly applauded in Rode's "Variations pour la Voix," and "The Last Rose of Summer." Perhaps the most successful performance of the evening was a duet for clarionet and piano, brilliantly executed by Messrs. J. H. and G. W. Hallett. Mr. G. W. Hallett also played two of his own compositions for the pianoforte, which were well received. The hall was crowded.

THE half-yearly concert of Jackson's Choral Society was given at the Hall, Store Street, Bedford Square, on Monday evening, the 8th ult. The programme consisted of a selection of choruses from Rossini, Mozart, &c., with Locke's music to "Macbeth" (Novello's arrangement), the solos being taken by Miss Tomlinson, Miss Crawford, Miss Lottie Harmer and Mr. Arden, who, with the choir, were eminently successful, and received enthusiastic applause. Miss Mary Barr, Miss Barrell, Miss Wheeler and Mr. Waltham also contributed vocal solos, several of which were encored; as was the piano solo by Mr. Logan. The choruses, quartets and part-songs were extremely well rendered. The concert was conducted, as usual, by Mr. George F. Harmer, who appeared to have the choir well under control. Mr. Haydn Harrison and Miss Harmer were the accompanists. The Hall was well filled.

THE annual morning concert of Madlle. Bondy under the conductorship of Herr Ganz, was given on Saturday, the 13th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, before a large and fashionable audience. The programme included Weber's grand duet in E flat major, for pianoforte and clarionet, played by Madlle Bondy and Mr. Lazarus, Bach's "Gavotte and Musette," "Barcarolle" (Op. 30), Rubinstein, Chopin's Valse brillante (Op. 18), and Liszt's "Campanella," all of which were given by Madlle. Bondy with much precision and care. The suite in D major (Bargiel) for pianoforte and violin played by Madlle. Bondy and Herr Ludwig was greatly applauded. Herr Ludwig played in excellent style Vieuxtemps' "Romance Feuilles d'Album" and Paganini's "Moto perpetuo;" and the Duo concertant for two pianofortes (Weber's "Preciosa") by Mendelssohn and Moscheles, performed by Madlle. Bondy and Herr Ganz, was exceedingly well executed. The vocalists were Miss Banks and Mr. J. W. Turner.

A CONCERT was given on Saturday, the 6th ult., at the Bow and Bromley Institute, under the direction of Miss Isabella Glennie, assisted by Miss Nellie Wheeler, the Sisters Demani, Madame Martin, Mr. Wall and Mr. J. B. Bolton. Miss Glennie was successful in her rendering of Van Noorden's song, "Grist to the mill." Miss Nellie Wheeler gained much applause in her two solos, and Mr. J. B. Bolton gave Campagna's baritone songs, "The Scout," and "Speed on, my bark," with good expression. Two part-songs were also well sung. The concert was conducted by Mr. R. Limpus, R.A.M., and Mr. Michael Watson.

A SUCCESSFUL concert was given at Milton Hall, Camden Town, on Saturday evening, the 29th April, by Madlle. Forckell. Mr. Langman, in Mendelssohn's March from "Athalie," and Madlle. Bourgeois in De Kontski's "Faust" Selection, proved themselves accomplished pianists; and M. Chainde (violin), and M. Felice Bellis (flute) were also highly effective in their solos. Mr. H. Parkin was encored in two songs; and Mr. Stedman's rendering of "The Anchor's weighed," and "Love's Request," was thoroughly appreciated by the audience.

Mr. R. B. Pepper, Miss Clementi, Miss Carter, Madame Elsie and the concert-giver, rendered the music allotted to them with much success. Madlle. Forckell has a good mezzo-soprano voice, and her singing throughout the evening gave the greatest satisfaction.

We are glad to find that, at a meeting of the Professors of the Royal Academy of Music, it was unanimously resolved to offer Sir William Sterndale Bennett a testimonial of the cordial sympathy of professional artists and lovers of music in the honour recently conferred upon him by Her Majesty. As the most appropriate and permanent memorial, it was decided that an Exhibition be founded, called the "Sterndale Bennett Exhibition," to assist musical students in their education in the Royal Academy of Music, of which institution the eminent musician whose name will thus be perpetuated was a pupil, and is now the Principal.

Miss Agnes Zimmermann gave an evening concert on the 27th April, at the Hanover Square Rooms, which was attended by a highly appreciative audience. The programme included Mozart's Sonata, No. 9, for pianoforte and violin; a new Sonata by Miss Zimmermann, in G minor, for pianoforte and violoncello (every movement of which is replete with interest), and Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. In all these pieces, Miss Zimmermann's playing was as refined and intellectual in conception as it was perfect in execution, a fact amply attested by the enthusiasm of the audience. In Schumann's "Humoreske," she fully proved her sympathy with this composer's works, and fairly earned the warm applause with which she was greeted. Mr. Henry Holmes (violin) and Signor Piatti (violoncello) were her associates in the instrumental department, and Herr Stockhausen was the vocalist.

Reviews.

Novello, Ewer and Co.

Gallia. Motett composed for the Opening of the London International Exhibition, 1871. Gounod. (English and Latin words). Words from "Lamentations" I. v. 1, 2. 4, 12.

It is not often that the musical reviewer takes up a piece of music whose very title at once carries his thoughts far away from his ordinary sphere of art, and leads him to ponder on the tragical woes which seem like some quickly-gathered thundercloud, to have burst in blood over a neighbouring nation. Yet how touching the scene which is pictured to us, when we contemplate the exiled artist, Gounod, far from his home, clothing with saddest music those saddest words, "How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people, how is she become as a widow, she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary?" The composer has not failed to represent the bitter feelings of his heart in this Anthem (as it might justly be called), and strangely enough he has stereotyped the date of his nation's disaster by producing this composition as a foil to the specimens of German and English music written for the opening of this year's International Exhibition. Under ordinary circumstances, it would have been expected that the French music would have been characterized by excessive lightness, but here we have a composition most solemn and impressive. An "Andante molto maestoso" to the words "Quomodo sedet sola civitas," opens the work, the voices moving in a slow measure, in double thirds, downwards, whilst the bass part of the accompaniment moves in contrary motion. At the words, "Princeps provinciarum," a very fine effect is produced by the entrance of voices and instruments, fortissimo, on a chord of $\frac{6}{4}$ on G♯ the preceding close being in E major. The words "facta est sub tributo," introduced piano and in a low pitch, form a fine contrast to the preceding sentence. The Alto and Bass parts then give out in octaves a short theme in E minor—"Plorans ploravit in nocte," which is immediately answered by Tenors and Trebles in G major, forming thus an admirable antithesis to the former sentence; the words "omnes amici ejus, spreverunt eam et facti sunt ei inimici," set again to a sentence in a low pitch for the voices, brings this fine movement to a close. Latin scholars may perhaps complain, that for the sake of musical parallelism, the quantity of the word "spreverunt" has been somewhat overlooked, the chief accent (the down-beat) falling on the first syllable instead of the second, which is on the up-beat. The second movement—"Viæ Sion lugent"—commences, after a few introductory chords, with a Soprano solo, answered by the chorus, the same downward progression of chromatic thirds occurring, as in the first movement, but now placed over a stationary Bass. The solo then proceeds, at the words, "omnes portæ ejus destructæ," through a series of highly dramatic phrases, closing with a half-cadence on the dominant. In the few chords which follow this close, the musical student will find a most unusual progression consisting of $\frac{6}{5}$ $\frac{6}{5}$ $\frac{6}{4}$ on F, resolved on to a common chord of C. A fine crescendo, in which sclo and chorus both take part, leads up to the words "videte si est dolor sicut dolor meus," the whole sentence closing in the most original and striking manner on the chord C, G, A♯, E. The A♯ and E caught from this chord are bandied about by the accompaniments until the voices enter fortissimo to the words "Vide, Domine, afflictionem nostram," from which gradually bursts forth the final sunny and hope-breathing theme, "Jerusalem, turn to thy Lord," the major mode and bright accompaniment in triplets both tending to enhance the beautiful contrast which this finale forms to the melancholy tone of the previous colouring. No musician can take up this work without profiting by the study of its author's resources; no worshipper could hear it without being deeply moved. Its proper function is not to be heedlessly paraded before concert-goers or at empty State ceremonials, but to stir the purest devotional feelings in church or chamber. The words, which are from the first chapter of the "Lamentations," are so ably paraphrased in the English version, that the Motett may well take its place among Anthems for Lent, or any other penitential season, the title "Gallia" being simply a title, and only bearing a relation to the work itself through the events which called it into existence.

Lucia di Lammermoor (The Bride of Lammermoor). An Opera, in Three Acts, by G. Donizetti. Translated into English, and Edited by Natalia Macfarren.

The interesting story of "Lucia di Lammermoor," apart from the attractiveness of the music, will always make it a favourite with operatic audiences; and, considering the ample opportunity for the display both of the vocal and histrionic abilities of the leading tenor and soprano, it is not likely that singers will willingly let the work die. In the excellent edition before us, the editress has evidently carefully studied the most reliable versions of the Opera; and to those who have been accustomed to the wretched paraphrasing of the original Italian in the only accessible books before these octavo editions of the entire work appeared, will be delighted to find that in following the notes with Mrs. Macfarren's translation, not only the meaning of the words to which the composer has wedded them, but the feeling which actuated him in giving a musical colouring to the varied emotions which they express, have been, as far as practicable, faithfully and sympathetically rendered. We could point to many examples of this, but it will suffice to instance the commencement of the chorus, "Per te d'immenso giubilo," the words, "Hail to the happy bridal day," "Hence every thought of sorrow," seeming as if the notes had been originally written to them; and more especially the phrase, ending, in F sharp minor, in the tenor air, "Fra poco," the line "Look down in pity and forgive" being excellently fitted to the syncopated effects of Italian heart-broken music.

Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis. Composed by D. Macpherson.

THIS setting of the Evening Canticles displays much musicianship, and, occasionally, considerable power; but, unfortunately, the power is not sustained, and thus unity —one of the first essentials—is wanting. Were Mr. Macpherson to write often, and fly at less high game—at least, to begin with—he could hardly fail, with his powers, to produce work of much value.

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel. An Anthem, composed by the Earl of Mar.

AN unassuming and carefully phrased little work, showing much promise, but here and there giving evidence of inexperience. Owing to its simplicity, it will no doubt find a sphere of usefulness.

House of Israel. Full Anthem. Composed by Charles Henry Shepherd.

A SUFFICIENCY of good and appropriate ideas, with, at the same time, indications of a lack of experience in their expression, form the chief characteristics of this Anthem. The opening phrase, although flowing and ingenious in its counterpoint, begins and ends a little abruptly, and is not altogether free from consecutive perfect fifths—the bête noir of young composers. A point of imitation is afterwards led off by the basses, and treated freely. Subsequently, a few quiet, solemn harmonies bring the Anthem to an effective close.

Arise, O Lord, into Thy resting-place. Anthem. Composed by B. Agutter, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

IT is, doubtless, an advantage to young composers who have not fairly tested their own powers to seek assistance by the adoption of an antecedent style. This appears to have been an invariable rule with composers, great and small, and Mr. Agutter is no exception to the rule. It is a question, however, whether it is a good thing, in sacred composition, to go so far back in the choice of a style as Mr. Agutter seems to have done. A succession of somewhat old-fashioned sequences is hardly calculated to awaken devotional feelings in the mind of the average worshipper. Fortunately, however, Mr. Agutter's real musical feeling breaks out now and then, giving certain promise of better things to come, when he shall have acquired the power of giving free expression to his own inspirations.

Original Compositions for the Organ, by E. Silas. Nos. 4 and 5.

THE first of these is a charming Andante in A♭, full of good melody and graceful modulation. It cannot but be welcomed by the many genuine organists who are craving for a literature peculiar to their own instrument. The second, a Fantasia in E minor (No. 5), suitable for a concluding voluntary or a concert piece, consists of an introduction, in which arpeggio passages are ingeniously used as accompaniments to a theme, followed by a fugato movement, which works up admirably. The two numbers are calculated to supply two distinct wants among organists, and are both so excellent of their kind that formal compliments would be a waste of words.

Six Variations on Mendelssohn's "O Hills, O Vales," for the Pianoforte. Composed, and inscribed to Miss Grote, by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew.

MENDELSSOHN'S beautiful Part-song has here received that sympathetic treatment which might have been expected from so accomplished a musician and so warm an admirer of the composer as Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew. The variations are all well written, each having a thoroughly distinctive character, which is well preserved throughout. No. 5, in the tonic minor, is excellently harmonised; and the final one, in which the theme is put into triple rhythm, contains some highly effective points.

Suite, pour le Piano, composée par Adolphe Schloesser. No. 1. Prelude. 2. Menuet. 3. Courante. 4. Gavotte. 5. Gigue.

THESE pieces are appropriately dedicated to Mr. Cipriani Potter, an artist who, by precept and example, has had the most beneficial influence upon the musical taste of this country; and who, in his position as Principal of the Royal Academy of Music (a post which he so ably occupied for many years), has educated a host of missionaries, who are now engaged in spreading the result of his valuable teaching throughout the length and breadth of the land. A "Suite" in the present day is a novelty, but is no less welcome on that account. It is good that students should hear such pieces as Herr Schloesser has given us in this selection, even if they cannot themselves play them; and it is also good that composers who can throw off elegant and light trifles adapted to the taste of the time, should occasionally prove by such works as the one before us that they can write in the more severe and solid school in which the best creative artists have been trained. It is true that the words "Courante, Gavotte and Gigue" do not abstractedly convey any notion but that of music appropriate to dances; but the treatment of such pieces by the greatest apostles of counterpoint in a past age has thrown a halo of classicality around them which cannot but materially influence writers who desire to compose similar works in the present day. Herr Schloesser has thoroughly caught the style in which compositions of this class should be moulded; and, although he has evidently studied good models, there is much originality observable in several of his pieces. The Prelude, in D minor, commences with a strongly-marked subject, which is well sustained, both hands being equally employed, according to the method which prevailed before amateurs were appealed to by writing works in which their weak left hand was merely used to support the right. The change into the tranquil theme, in the dominant, is in good contrast with the opening subject, and its recurrence in the original key is extremely effective. The Menuet, in F major, follows well after the Prelude. The principal theme has much grace; and the Trio, with its clever passages of imitation, is sufficiently melodious to delight even those hearers who cannot appreciate the excellent part-writing which pervades the movement. The Courante, commencing in G minor and concluding in the tonic major, apart from its intrinsic attractiveness as a piece, will be found a highly useful study for both hands, the elegant semiquaver passages being tolerably evenly divided, the other part moving, meanwhile, in legato quavers. The change from minor to major has a wonderfully fresh effect. The Gavotte is, to our mind, the best of all the pieces. The opening subject, in D minor, is extremely original; and the left hand octave passages give much vitality to the second theme. The Trio in D major has a melody which cannot fail to please; and although there is much point in the writing for both hands, the movement is by no means difficult to play. The Gigue, in D major, opens with an elegant phrase, which is effectively repeated in the left hand, the counterpoint throughout this little piece being indeed remarkably good. Although, perhaps, scarcely as attractive in the subjects as the other numbers in this "Suite," it is by no means inferior in workmanship; and, well played, it will form a fitting finale to a work which should be welcomed by all who desire that the classical forms in musical art shall not be permitted to die out.

Trois Morceaux Caractéristiques, pour Piano, par Anselm Ehmant. No. 1. Zingarella. 2. Tristesse. 3. Allégresse.

THESE three sketches, dedicated to Mr. Charles Hallé, are healthy specimens of a good school of writing, and will well repay the amount of earnest practice which must always be brought to bear upon such music. The first, in B minor, commencing upon a key-note pedal, is perhaps the most pleasing of the three numbers; the second subject is flowing, and the part-writing shows much care throughout. The mournful theme of the second piece is aided by a broken accompaniment for the left hand, which is occasionally well contrasted by brief legato passages of quavers. Some effective modulations are introduced, which will require careful attention on the part of the performer, as the harmonies are distributed between the two hands in a more musician-like manner than is observable in the mere show pieces of the present day. The subject of No. 3 has sufficient vitality to establish a claim to joyfulness, and the metronomic mark shows that the composer expects the player to help him to give expression to this feeling by rapidity of finger. The smooth arpeggios given to the left hand in the expressive second subject are highly effective, after the detached phrases of accompaniment to the opening theme, and the return to the original key is extremely well managed. All these pieces amply justify their titles, and we unhesitatingly commend them to the attention of those in search of good music.

Margarita. Song. The verse by Frederick Enoch. The music by Adolphe Schloesser.

There is a genuine Spanish ring about the subject and treatment of this song which cannot fail to ensure for it a ready welcome. The theme, in D minor, is charmingly fresh and graceful, the first phrase containing an effective instance of the use of the flattened second of the scale. After the modulation into the relative major, we have a lovely bit of melody to the words, "She paused awhile, with fairy feet;" and the change to the tonic major gives much effect to the final line, in which the name of Margarita is lengthened out and repeated with a true lover's tenderness. Vocalists who can throw dramatic feeling into their singing will be glad to know of this song, which we can conscientiously say is one of the best of its class that we have seen for a long time.

Give (See the rivers flowing). Words by Adelaide Anne Procter. Music by Frederic N. Löhr.

The opening symphony and general character of this song bear such a striking resemblance to Sir Sterndale Bennett's well known "May dew" that it will probably scarcely receive the attention it deserves as a musician-like setting of Miss Procter's excellent words. It is well harmonised throughout; but the constant triplet accompaniment, preserved even when the change from triple to double rhythm occurs, becomes somewhat wearisome. The song is, however, extremely vocal, and may be made highly effective by a good vocalist.

Chappell and Co.

L'Ange du Berceau (Chant du Soir), pour Piano, par Berthold Tours.

A refined and expressive little sketch, requiring a trained mind and a trained hand to realise the intention of the composer. The subject is extremely simple, and the rocking effect of the accompaniment for the left hand well preserves the character of the composition. Such music as this will do more to cultivate the touch and taste of young pupils than any amount of so-called "Transcriptions" of songs, even when they are manufactured by the acknowledged best arrangers of the day.

Two Castles. Song. Written by Miss Wilhelmina Baines.

With the Stream. Barcarolle for Soprano and Mezzo-Soprano. Words by Robert Reece.

Composed by Berthold Tours.

The first of these vocal pieces has an elegant flowing subject, scarcely perhaps as strikingly original as most of the songs which have recently come before us by this accomplished composer, but treated with an equal amount of musician-like skill. The duet, "With the Stream," is certain to ensure a large amount of popularity: the theme is graceful and tuneful, without being commonplace, and the accompaniment is just as simple as the style of the music demands. It is by no means difficult to sing and the brief solos which occur in each part prevent that monotony so often observable in unpretending compositions like this, from the constant union of the two voices.

Augener and Co.

Valse du Printemps: Grand Morceau de Salon. Composée pour le Pianoforte par William Wasserzug.

Although scarcely supporting its title of "Grand Morceau de Salon," this waltz is entitled to commendation from the pleasing character of its themes and the uniformly careful manner in which they are harmonised. It is perhaps somewhat too long for the nature of the piece—as may be inferred when we say that, without any particular reason, it changes twice into the key of the dominant,—but it is animated throughout, and the subjects are sufficiently varied to prevent any sense of weariness, either to performer or listener. The change into C sharp minor—the key being entered and quitted by an enharmonic change—is an effective point.

R. Cocks and Co.

In Memoriam, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Brinley Richards.

This composition forms No. 20 of a series of pianoforte works, by ancient and modern authors, called "The Pianist's Library," edited by Mr. Brinley Richards. It is genuine music, and although simple in construction, the feeling is indicated by the title can only be realised by a truly sympathetic finger. The wailing theme, in F minor, is most tenderly treated throughout, the composer relying, like a true artist, upon the most legitimate writing for his effects. The change into the tonic major, in which key the piece ends, gives much interest to the concluding portion of this little sketch, which is one of the most poetical we have yet seen from Mr. Richards's pen.

Norah, Sweet Norah. Ballad. Words by L. M. Thornton. Music by W. T. Wrighton.

Although Mr. Wrighton's songs rarely call up any new musical idea, they often awaken many of our cherished old ones, and the ballad before us is no exception to the rule. It certainly is not a copy of any Irish melody, but it reminds us of so many as to become positively tantalising. Nevertheless, it is pretty, appropriate to the words, and singable; and although it might be better accompanied, there can be little doubt that, expressively sung, it would prove effective with a mixed audience. Besides, there is a portrait of an Irish girl on the title-page pretty enough to warn off all ascetic critics.

A Serenade. Composed and dedicated to her Sister, Miss Ann Tucker, by Theodora.

The name of this composer is new to us; but there is sufficient merit in her first essay to make us desire to meet with her again. The theme of the song is extremely melodious, the harmonies evince the possession of a cultivated ear, and it is accompanied throughout with that simple grace which such unpretending music demands. The modulation into the relative minor is excellently expressive of the words, and the return to the key, through the dominant, is well managed. We perceive that the song has already been sung by Mr. W. H. Cummings; and, as it is admirably suited to his voice, we can scarcely doubt that he will establish it in public favour.

King René's Daughter. A Cantata for Female Voices, with Pianoforte Accompaniment. The Verse by Frederick Enoch. The Music by Henry Smart.

This Cantata, of the performance of which, at an invitation concert, we made favourable mention in our last number, gains upon us on a closer acquaintance, for we have time to linger over many beauties which pass so rapidly before us on a first hearing as to prevent the possibility of our fully appreciating them. Mr. Smart always writes tunefully—always gracefully, and has the rare merit of throwing a charm around his accompaniment which makes his music equally acceptable to the learned and the unlearned. If we have any fault to find with the present work, it is that it is too uniformly graceful—too purely melodious; but when we consider that this very fault will, by the majority of listeners, be considered a merit, we feel that in frankly stating the impression made upon us by the performance of the Cantata we are doing our utmost to recommend it to the general public. The Overture is an effective and appropriate introduction to the work, and is well arranged for four hands. The opening chorus of Vintagers is based on a charmingly fresh subject, and the change from double to triple rhythm is exceedingly effective. In the Trio and Chorus which follows we have some excellent instances of the happy manner in which the composer weaves in his pianoforte part with the voices; and we may also mention the good dramatic feeling shown in the Soprano and Contralto solos, which carry on the story. The duo and chorus, "There is a fair maid dwelling there," is our especial favourite; and, if well sung, it will no doubt invariably secure the encore with which it was greeted on its first representation. The melody is extremely pleasing; and the entry of the chorus, on the words "And the nightingale grows mute," gives an indescribable charm to the conclusion of the phrase. After a clever Recitative and Air, for the Mezzo-Soprano, we come to an effective Quartet, for two Soprani and two Contralti, "Who hath seen the Troubadour?" a portion of which is unaccompanied. This is excellently written throughout; and there is much dramatic feeling in the occasional introduction of the Soprano solo. Passing over a Scena and Chorus for Mezzo-Soprano, a Recitative followed by a very beautiful air, "I love the rose," for Soprano, and some short narrative Recitatives, we stop to give a word of praise to a Trio, "Now amulet and spell," which is melodious, well written for the voices, and admirably expressive of the words throughout. The Duet and Chorus, "Sweet the Angelus is ringing," is unquestionably one of the most characteristic pieces in the work, the pertinacious dominant in the pianoforte part suggesting the bell with good effect, whilst the two voices are singing a smooth and appropriately simple melody. After a Recitative for Mezzo-Soprano, the Finale is ushered in by a martial instrumental introduction, and the work concludes with a spirited chorus, interspersed with solos for the Soprano. For the due interpretation of this Cantata it will be necessary to secure not only a choir of fresh and well-trained female voices, with a competent soprano, mezzo soprano and contralto for principals, but a really efficient and reliable pianist. With a body of such artists at hand, however, the success of the work is certain; and considering the growing popularity of the Cantata for mixed voices, there can be little doubt that this one, written exclusively for female vocalists, by the novelty of its form, as well as by its intrinsic excellence, must command a large share of public attention.

Prelude and Gavotte, for the Pianoforte. Composed by Charles Salaman.

Mr. Salaman is one of the few composers of the present day who seem resolved to re produce specimens of the fine old school of pianoforte music, upon which most of the greatest players have grounded their studies. Not only as examples of good and pure composition, but as excellent exercises for the fingers of both hands, we cordially recommend this Prelude and Gavotte to the consideration of players as well as teachers. The themes of both the compositions are well marked; and the writing throughout, without showing any undue pedantry, proves that the composer is thoroughly competent to grapple with that solid contrapuntal style which, although little used in the present day, was with the old masters the language in which they preached the art to the world. We are glad to see that Mr. Salaman has gracefully dedicated his pieces to Dr. Ferdinand Hiller.

☞ Once more we feel it necessary to say that from the immense mass of music fowarded to us for review, it is impossible to do more than make a selection. Every piece receives its due share of attention; but we cannot undertake to give our reasons why some are noticed and others passed over. This, we hope, will be a sufficient answer to the many letters we constantly receive on the subject from composers, some requesting us to give our opinion upon their works "in the next number," and others sending us second copies, from the fixed conviction that, as they have not been reviewed, they must have "miscarried."

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—It is difficult to answer satisfactorily your correspondent, R M., owing to the loose way in which the words referred to are used by composers.

"Andante" was originally a direction for keeping moving instead of taking it easily, which was expressed by the word "Adagio." But when "Andante" acquired the signification of rather slow (instead of rather fast), its diminutive "Andantino" came to imply, rather less slow, instead of rather less fast, as heretofore; the sense in which the word was employed depending chiefly upon the knowledge of its history, and of the Italian language possessed by the composer.

This is a very mild example of the confusion and equivoque of which musical terminology is full to repletion. Nothing can possibly surpass these in absurdity, except, perhaps, the attempts which are now and then made, not to explain, but to remove them.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—A considerable amount of ignorance prevails in this part of the country as to the proper significance of the term "Doctor of Music" affixed to the name of any Professor of Music. Persons are known to dub themselves "Mus. Doc.," whose qualifications are not of the highest possible order. Can the title "Mus. Doc." be legally assumed without a proper diploma from the Universities either of Oxford, Cambridge or Dublin? If it can, what are the other Universities from which a diploma is obtainable? Can a Continental University supply impostors with sham degrees at given prices, say "Mus. Bac.," £8; "Mus. Doc.," £10?

Answers to the questions concluding this note would be the means of enlightening many in this quarter.

I am, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

ABERDEEN.—The conclusion of Mr. Latter's career as conductor of the Choral Union, on Friday evening, the 14th April, was worthy of its commencement, when, twelve years ago, he first wielded the baton at a public performance inaugurating the new hall as a music hall. Many will still remember the able manner in which he led on his forces on that occasion, when the Oratorio of St. Paul was as perfectly given as could ever have been expected by a provincial choir. Since then many other performances have taken place; in most cases, too, with marked success; and to Mr. Latter, as was truly said by Sheriff Thomson on Friday evening, "this city owes more, perhaps, than to any other source, such knowledge of the higher music as it possesses." None will regret his departure more than the members of the Choral Union, who are so much indebted to him. Israel in Egypt was the work chosen for performance on this occasion, and at the close of the first part the public testimonial to Mr. Latter, which has been subscribed for during the last six weeks, was presented by Sheriff Comrie Thomson. This testimonial, which is the result of the labours of an energetic committee, composed of some of the leading citizens, consisted of a silver epergne of a most handsome pattern, and a purse of sovereigns. On ascending the platform, Mr. Thomson was received with several rounds of applause, and after paying the highest compliments to the zeal and ability displayed by Mr. Latter since his connection with the Choral Union, he concluded his address thus: "I take it upon myself to say, in the name of the subscribers to this testimonial, and I think I may safely say of the community in general that you have their best wishes—(loud and continued applause)—and they hope to hear of your continued happiness and prosperity, and that they will never cease to watch your career with the deepest interest—(renewed applause). It is in token of these feelings, sir, that in the name of the subscribers and of the public, I beg to present you with this epergne and plateau, along with this purse of sovereigns." (Loud and prolonged cheering.) In returning thanks, Mr. Latter said that it had always been his earnest desire, since coming to Aberdeen, to promote the interests of true art; and he hoped that he had done so at least with a certain degree of success. He left, he said, with very deep regret, and trusted to be able again frequently to meet the many kind friends he had made in the city, and to appear occasionally on the platform, although not as conductor of the Choral Union. Mr. Latter resumed his seat amid applause, again and again renewed. Upon the epergne and plateau, which were supplied by Messrs. Jamieson, jewellers to the Queen, Union Street, was the following inscription:—"Presented to Richard Latter, Esq., R.A.M., along with a purse of sovereigns, in recognition of the eminent and valuable services he has rendered to music in the city of Aberdeen for a period of twenty years. 14th April, 1871."

BEDFORD.—On the 25th April the members of the Bedford Amateur Musical Society gave the first concert of their sixth season, before a large audience, at the Assembly Rooms. The first part was devoted exclusively to the works of Mendelssohn, and included a selection from Elijah (commencing with the Overture), and the 42nd Psalm, "As the hart pants," all the pieces being given with remarkable effect. A feature in the second part was a composition by Mr. P. H. Diemer, the conductor, "The Vision of St. John," consisting of soli and chorus, which was received with the utmost favour. Mr. Diemer's treatment of the subject is spoken of by the local press with much enthusiasm, the solemn character of the theme being, it is stated, excellently reflected in the music. Spohr's Cantata, God, Thou art great, was also performed with good effect, the choral parts being sung with remarkable precision, and the solos being also most satisfactorily rendered. The concert was in every respect a decided success.

BISHOP'S STORTFORD.—Miss Amy Perry's concert took place at the Corn Exchange on Wednesday, the 26th April, and was a thorough success. The performance was under the patronage of the gentry and clergy of the neighbourhood, and the audience comprised some of the leading families of the town and vicinity. The instrumentalists were—Mr. Parker, violoncello; Mr. W. F. Parker, R.A., 1st violin; Mr. Wilton, viola; and the Misses Patti and Corelli Parker, 2nd violins. Miss Amy Perry's pianoforte playing was deserving of the warm commendations and applause with which it was greeted. The singing of the Sisters Doria received enthusiastic plaudits, and they were several times recalled. Mr. W. C. Bell also appeared to be a favourite with the audience, and Master Parker was highly successful in a violin solo.

CALNE, WILTS.—A Musical Society has been formed in this town, under distinguished patronage, and under the able conductorship of Mr. Greenwood. The first meeting of the Elementary Singing Class took place in the Town Hall on the 5th April, and is to be continued every Wednesday evening.

CAMBORNE.—A performance of Handel's Messiah was given by the members of the Camborne Choral Society in the Assembly Rooms on Tuesday, the 25th April. The chorus was thoroughly efficient, and the orchestra was reinforced by the Penzance Orchestral band, led, with his usual ability, by Mr. W. C. Hemmings. The tenor part was rendered with good effect by Mr. Harvey, who was particularly successful in the Passion Music, and "Thou shalt break them." The bass solos were divided between Mr. H. A. Smith and Mr. E. P. Thomas. The Misses Mitchell, in the principal soprano and contralto music, evinced much talent, and the subordinate airs were ably sung by Miss Davey and Miss Hall. Mr. Dunn's execution of the solo trumpet music deserves mention. Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A., conducted with his usual ability. The performance adds another success to the many achieved by the Camborne Choral Society. Mr. G. J. Smith presided at the harmonium.

CANTERBURY.—The concert of Mr. Gough, which took place at the Music Hall on the 1st ult., was a decided success. Madame Fraser, the soprano, has a good voice, and sang with a freshness which ensured her a hearty welcome. Mr. Moulding gave the two songs allotted to him with good effect, especially "Macgregor's Gathering," which elicited a well merited encore, and Mr. Plant was also highly effective. Mr. Nicholson, besides playing one of his clever flute solos, presided with Mr. John Harrison at the piano with much ability.

DERBY.—The members of the Derby Choral Union gave the third concert of their fifth season on the 28th April, at the Drill Hall. The principal feature of the programme was Mr. J. F. Barnett's Cantata, The Ancient Mariner, the solo parts being ably sustained by Miss Walker, Madame Whitaker, Mr. Furniss and Mr. Naylor. All the choruses were effectively given, and the work was warmly received throughout. In the first part a Cantata by Mr. Woodward, Excelsior, consisting chiefly of choruses, connected by tenor airs and recitatives, was performed, and achieved a marked success.

DEVIZES.—On Thursday, the 11th ult., a highly successful concert was given at the Town Hall by the Amateur Vocal Society. The programme consisted of glees, songs, duets, &c., all of which were received with much applause. A small but efficient band played Rossini's Overture, L'Italiana, and Haydn's Symphony, No. 12. Mr. W. Sly was an excellent accompanist. Mr. W. Price presided at the harmonium, and Mr. J. T. Abraham conducted, as usual.

DEVONPORT.—A very careful rendering of Haydn's Creation was given by the Devonport Choral Association on the 3rd ult., before a large and appreciative audience. The choir numbered about 50, and the choruses, especially "The Heavens are telling," and "The marvellous work," were sung with excellent precision and effect. The principal parts were well rendered by Miss Dennis, Miss Snell (who sang "With verdure clad" with good expression), Messrs. Stott, Clements, J. A. Boolds, Lee, Jarvis and Daw, the important solos of Raphael being distributed amongst four members of the choir. Mr. W. H. Hannaford was a most efficient conductor, and the choir was ably accompanied by Mr. Browne on the pianoforte, and Master Clements on the harmonium.

DONCASTER.—The Musical Society gave an excellent concert on Tuesday the 25th April in the Guildhall, before a large audience. The first part consisted of Mozart's Twelfth Mass, which was exceedingly well given, the various points being taken up with a readiness that evidenced much careful training. The solo parts were sung by Miss Brooke, Mrs. Shipman, Mr. Firth, and Mr. J. Kirk, members of the Society. The second part opened with Mozart's Overture, La Clemenza di Tito, which was well played by the band. Mrs. Argles, Miss Alice Frith (R.A.M.) and Mr. Harrison contributed songs, &c., and Mr. Isles, who led the band, played a solo by Sainton, and joined Mrs. Argles in a duet for piano and violin. Danby's Glee, "Awake, Æolian lyre," was sung by the full choir, the effect of this fine old composition by seventy voices reflecting the greatest credit on the members of the choir, and their able conductor, Mr. J. H. Eyre, choirmaster of the Parish Church, to whose energy and perseverance much of the success of the concert may be attributed.

EXETER.—The members of the Exeter Oratorio Society may well be congratulated on the success which attended their performance of Samson at the Victoria Hall on the 1th ult. The principal vocalists were Miss A. Smyth, soprano; Miss M. Winniecombe, contralto; Mr. Edward Lloyd, tenor; and Mr. William Winn, bass. Miss Winniecombe's recitatives were well sung throughout and in the airs "Return, O God of Hosts!" and "The Holy One of Israel," she was deservedly applauded. Miss Smyth's greatest success was in the air, "Let the bright seraphim," which was rapturously received. The beautiful air "Total Eclipse"—in which Samson bemoans his blindness—was rendered by Mr. Lloyd in a manner that showed a true appreciation of the spirit of both musician and poet. Mr. Winn's rich bass voice was heard to great advantage in the airs "Thy glorious deeds," and "Honour and arms scorn such a foe," both of which were excellently rendered. Mr.

G. W. Lyon, the new conductor, must have taken great pains with the choir, the singing of all the choruses being remarkable for precision and correct intonation. The band, under the leadership of Mr. Rice, performed the accompaniments most satisfactorily Mr. Fly's trumpet obbligato to "Let the bright seraphim" must also be highly commended.

GLASGOW.—The Glasgow Choral Union gave a concert on Saturday afternoon, the 20th ult., in the nave of the Cathedral, under the able conductorship of Mr. Lambeth. Especial interest attached to the selection from the circumstance that three of the most important pieces in the programme were sung in Glasgow for the first time, of which at least two were compositions of remarkable breadth and originality. The first of these was the "In exitu Israel" of Samuel Wesley. There is wonderful ingenuity in the construction of this Motett, and as a work of art it was unquestionably the finest piece of music sung at the concert. So excellent a composition ought not to be allowed to slumber, and we hope that when opportunities offer it may again find its way into the Choral Union programmes. Another good work was Bach's "I wrestle and pray," a Motett for double choir, which was exceedingly well rendered. The third and last novelty was "I and my house," a short Cantata for male voices by Schulz. It is written in a popular style, and in that solid harmony so well adapted for performance in the Cathedral, but it exhibits no marked signs of originality or invention. The remaining pieces were Sebastian Wesley's Anthem, "God be merciful unto us;" Sullivan's Anthem, "O love the Lord;" Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer;" Cherubini's trio, "Bow down thine ear;" Henry Smart's trio, "How lovely are Thy dwellings," and Spohr's duet, "Children pray this love to cherish." Mendelssohn's Motett was excellently sung, the soprano solo being taken by Miss Margaretta Smyth. The solo parts in the other pieces were given by Miss Allan, Miss Johnstone, Miss Isa M'Naughton, Miss Rylands, Mr. John Wallace, Mr. Carleton Smyth, and Mr. Adam Runcie, and the accompaniments were ably supplied by Mr. Charles Ferguson on the harmonium. The audience, though large, was less numerous than is usual in Cathedral performances.

HEREFORD.—The concert of the Hereford Choral Society—the first for which the Shire-hall has liberally been granted by the magistrates of the county—took place recently before a large audience. The music performed was a selection from Handel's Oratorio, Samson, the principal vocalists being Madame Thaddeus Wells, the Revs. J. R. G Taylor, A. Robinson, and T. M. Everett, of Hereford Cathedral, and the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe. Madame Wells was highly effective in the soprano music, the air "Let the bright seraphim" being so well given as to elicit an unanimous encore. The Rev. A. Robinson sang with good expression the recitative and air, "Total eclipse;" the well known solo, "Honour and arms," was rendered with much power by the Rev. T. M. Everett; and the pathetic air, "How willing, my paternal," was given with true musical feeling by the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe. All the choruses were sung with remarkable precision and effect, and Mr. G. Townshend Smith, to whose unwearied exertions the Society owes so much of its present efficiency, conducted in his usual able manner.

LEEDS.—The members of the Leeds Madrigal and Motett Society held a Soirée in St. George's Schoolroom on the 15th ult. After tea, the chair was taken by Mr. C. E. Wurtzburg, and a number of solos, madrigals, and part-songs were sung. The chairman congratulated the members upon the excellent manner in which the various pieces had been given, and also upon the great strength of the Society, numerically and musically. The annual report was read by Mr. W. S. B. Cheveley, one of the Hon. Secretaries, by which it appeared that during the past session the total receipts had been £83 17s. 11d., and the expenditure left a balance of £30 in hand. The registered members numbered 136. The report recognised the debt owed to the founder of the Society, Dr. Spark, and stated that he had consented to retain his position as conductor. It also spoke of Mr. T. W. Dodds as a most valuable adjunct to the ranks of the members. The Society was declared to be in a more flourishing condition than it had been at any time since its formation twenty years ago. After the motion for the adoption of the report had been agreed to, thanks were voted to Dr. Spark, Mr. T. W. Dodds, Mr. Cheveley, the ladies and the chairman.

LEICESTER.—An amateur concert was given in the Freemasons' Hall, Halford Street, on Friday evening, the 28th April, by Mr. E. J. Crow's Choral Class. The concert commenced with Mr. Barnby's Cantata, Rebekah, in which the solo parts of Rebekah, Isaac, and Eliezer were ably sustained by Miss Black Mr. S. Tebbutt and Mr. George Read, and the choruses were given with good effect by the class. Mr. Crow conducted, and was assisted in the accompaniments by Mr. T. A. Wykes on the harmonium. The second part consisted of secular music, including part-songs by Mendelssohn and Leslie, Balfe's duet, "O'er shepherd pipe"; Cooke's tenor and bass duet, "The Army and Navy," well sung by Messrs. Tebbutt and Read, and encored: songs, "The Happiest Land," Mr. G. Read (encored): "The Unchangeable," "My heart is thine for ever," and Bishop's popular glee, "The Chough and Crow." In the course of the second part Mr. Crow played Beethoven's Sonata in E Minor, Op. 90, in excellent style, and elicited much applause. The concert evidently gave much gratification to a numerous audience.

LIVERPOOL.—The members of the "Societa Armonica" gave their thirty-fourth open rehearsal on Saturday evening, the 22nd April, at the Liverpool Institute, Mount Street, in the presence of a very large audience. The instrumental pieces were—Overture, Die Pfiegekinder, by Lindpaintner; Symphony in D, No. 2, Op. 10, by Fesca; Fantasie buriesque, for the violoncello (with orchestral accompaniment), "Carnavale de Venise," by Servais, the solo played by Mr. Weston; and Beethoven's march from Prometheus. all of which were thoroughly successful. Romberg's Lay of the Bell was also well rendered, the choral parts being especially effectively given, and the solos most efficiently sung by Miss Monkhouse, Miss Borst, Mr. T. J. Hughes, Mr. T. Foulkes, and Mr. W. Forrester. Mr. Armstrong officiated as conductor, and Mr. Henry Lawson as leader of the band.——THE consecration of St. John's, West Derby, Liverpool, took place on Saturday, the 20th ult. After the ceremony the usual morning service was proceeded with. The Suffrages (Tallis), Psalms, &c., were most impressively given by a large and effective choir, augmented for the occasion, under the direction of Mr. Ridley, organist of the Parish Church, who presided at a magnificent organ by Hill, fully testing its qualities in Young's "Great and glorious," and in the introduction to Elvey's "I was glad." The organist elect, Mr. Claude Ridley, accompanied the Te Deum and Jubilate, Baker in F, and also played the concluding voluntaries, which were the finale to Mozart's "Jupiter," and Handel's "Occasional Overture," in a brilliant manner.

LONGSIGHT.—A testimonial, consisting of a handsome timepiece with a suitable inscription, and a purse containing a substantial sum, has been presented by his friends and the members of the congregation to Mr. Wm. J. Young, who has recently resigned the appointment of organist and choirmaster at St. John's Church, "as an acknowledgment of his musical abilities, efficient services, and exemplary conduct during a period of 13 years." Mr. Young's name is chiefly associated with the authorship of some excellent part-songs.

MAIDEN NEWTON, DORSETSHIRE.—On the 16th ult., the members of the Maiden Newton Choral Society gave their first concert in the National School-room. The excellent singing of Mr. H. Taylor (Tenor), and Mr. Horscroft (Bass), Lay Vicars of Salisbury Cathedral, and the playing of Mr. Boyton Smith, of Dorchester, were much admired. Mr. J. Brown conducted.

MARLBOROUGH.—A concert was given at the Town Hall, on the 10th ult., in aid of the Savernake Cottage Hospital, which, we regret to say, was not very numerously attended, although the performance was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory, and the programme a highly attractive one. The Andante and Allegro from Beethoven's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Op. 12), excellently played by Messrs. Salisbury and Bainbridge; and Meyer's Trio for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte (Op. 2), in which Mr. Bambridge took the violoncello part, and Mr. Sankey the pianoforte—were the instrumental concerted pieces. Mr. Bambridge's pianoforte playing was an interesting feature in the programme, one of his solos being unanimously re-demanded. The part-songs were rendered with excellent effect, and several vocal solos were also given with much success by Messrs. F. Glass, T. and G. Foster, W. H. Hillier, and Lavington. A magnificent "Concert Grand" pianoforte was kindly lent for the occasion by Messrs. Broadwood and Sons, free of charge.

MONTREAL, CANADA.—A highly successful concert of sacred music was given in the St. James Street Wesleyan Church, on the 31st March. The chorus consisted of about fifty well trained voices, conducted by Mr. Smith, Organist of the Church. The programme was composed of selections from the standard Oratorios, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, and Romberg's Lay of the Bell. The soloists were Mrs. Saunderson, Miss Hoerner, Mrs. Walde, Mr. James Hilton, and Mr. Bentley. The solo, "Angels ever bright and fair," was sung by Mrs. Saunderson with much taste and feeling; and "I know that my Redeemer liveth" was also rendered with good expression. Mr. Bentley in the solo, "Straight opening her fertile womb," displayed his voice to great advantage; and the duet, "O Lovely peace," by Misses Hoerner and Pringle, was very effectively given. The trio, "On thee each living," sung by Mrs. Walsh, Messrs. Hilton and Bentley, was one of the best pieces of the evening. The choruses throughout were carefully rendered, the parts being very evenly balanced. They were ably accompanied on the noble organ by Master C. Hilton, an amateur, only eighteen years of age. The proceeds of the concert were presented to the "Methodist House."

NORTH SHIELDS.—The large and very fine new organ which has just been placed in Holy Trinity Church, was opened on the 3rd ult. The instrument has been built at a cost of £450, by Messrs. Nicholson and Son, of Newcastle, and reflects great credit on their establishment. It contains 1662 pipes, which are made of the finest mixed and spotted metals, 33 draw stops, and has three composition pedals to great, and two to swell organ. There was full choral service in the morning, the organist being Mr. John Nicholson, of Hexham Abbey Church. The processional hymn was the beautiful one beginning "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The Versicles and Prayers were intoned by the Rev. G. E. Sharland, curate of St. Hilda's, South Shields; and the Lessons were read by the Rev. J. Shooter (the vicar), and the Rev. T. Brutton, vicar of Christ Church. The Rev. Canon Whitley preached from Matt. xxvi. 13. In the afternoon there was a performance on the organ by Mr. W. A. Leggatt. A large congregation assembled in the evening, when the service was again full choral, the organist being Mr. Rea. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. J. Taylor, of St. Mary's, South Shields.

PAISLEY.—The second concert this season by the Tonic Sol-fa Institute was given in the Abbey on Thursday evening, the 27th April, when Haydn's First Mass and a selection, including Mendelssohn's setting of the 43rd Psalm, were performed. The soli parts were rendered by Miss Allan, soprano, Mr. H. M'Nabb, and several members of the choir. The singing of the Mass by the Institute's choir was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory, the "Quoniam Tu solus" and "Et resurrexit" being especially worthy of commendation. In the second part of the programme Miss Allan sang "Let the bright seraphim" really well; and a special word of praise is also due to this lady for her very intelligent rendering of Cherubini's "Ave Maria," the recall which she obtained being well merited. The accompaniments to the Mass were, on the whole, efficiently played by an orchestra of some sixteen instruments from Glasgow. Mr. Brown conducted with much intelligence and precision.

PENZANCE.—On Tuesday, the 2nd ult., a performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus was given in St. John's Hall, by the Choral Society. The work was most satisfactorily rendered, the choruses being sung with much vigour throughout, and the solos with care and appropriate expression. Miss Vingoe made her début as principal soprano, and was exceedingly well received, her best effort being "Wise men flattering," and the duet, "Lovely peace," in which she was joined by Mrs. Nunn, who most successfully sustained the contralto music throughout. Mr. Sampson was satisfactory in the tenor songs, particularly in "O Liberty," a conspicuous feature of which was the violoncello obbligato, played by Mr. Marrack. Mr. S. White was the baritone soloist. Mr. W. C. Hemmings led the band, Mr. R. White, jun., ably presided at the organ, and Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A., conducted with his accustomed efficiency.

PERTH.—On the evening of Tuesday, the 25th April, the Euterpean Society (a private musical Society, conducted by Mrs. Hempel, widow of the late Dr. Hempel) gave a private concert of sacred and secular music in the Academy, which was largely attended. The sacred part included Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer," Spohr's "As pants the hart," the trio, "Lift thine eyes," and a trio by Winter, "O Jesu." The solo in Mendelssohn's Psalm and Handel's Air, "O had I Jubal's lyre," were given by members of the Society with much taste and refinement. The secular part consisted of Bishop's "Spirits advance," Mendelssohn's "Shepherd's song," W. Macfarren's "You stole my love," &c., interspersed with several solos.——On Friday evening, the 28th April, the Perth Choral Union, conducted by Mr. Linter, and assisted by a small orchestra, led by Mr. Stevenson, of Dundee, gave a performance of Haydn's Third (Imperial) Mass, the solos and quartets being taken by members of the Union. Several part-songs and solos were also given by the Union, and Rossini's Overtures to Tancredi and L'Italiana were performed by the orchestra.

PLYMOUTH.—A very attractive Chamber Concert brought the season of the Plymouth Amateur Vocal Association to a close on the 17th ult. The programme was well selected and varied. The principal instrumental concerted pieces were two movements from Mendelssohn's Quartet (No. 1), excellently played by Messrs. H. Reed, Lovell and R. Dunstan (violins), F. Reed (violoncello), and F. N. Löhr (pianoforte); and the same composer's trio in D minor, equally well rendered by Messrs H. Reed, F. Reed and Löhr. The Andante and Allegro from Mozart's Sonata in F, the executants being Mr. Lovell Dunstan (an amateur violinist) and Mr. Löhr (pianoforte), formed an interesting feature in the selection, and the performance was thoroughly appreciated by the audience. Several choral pieces were rendered with remarkable precision and effect; and a very efficient orchestra, led by Mr. Henry Reed, gave the overture to Don Giovanni, and the Andante and Finale of Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony with much success. The concert concluded with the National Anthem.——MRS. KERLEY'S second annual concert was given at the Mechanics' Institute on the 20th April. The first part consisted of sacred music. The reception accorded to Miss Bowerman in "As pants the hart" (Spohr), and Mr. Rendle in "Tantum ergo" was very flattering, and Miss Greig was encored in "O that I had wings like a dove" (Topliff), and Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair." Miss Emily Crocker in "Agnus Dei" (from Weber's Mass in G); Miss Watts in "Dona nobis" (from the same composition); and Mr. Mellor in "Be thou faithful unto death," from St. Paul, were highly effective, and much applauded. One of the great attractions of the evening was the performance on the piano by Miss Minnie Kerley, a child seven years of age. In the second part the quartet, "Soldier, rest! thy warfare's o'er," composed expressly for this occasion by Mr. G. B. Fentum, was capitally rendered, and had a fair share of applause. Mrs. Kerley and Miss Bayly played a duet on the pianoforte with much taste and executive power.

PONTYPOOL.—The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a concert on Tuesday, April 18th, when Mendelssohn's Oratorio, Elijah, was performed. The Town Hall was crowded, and the concert, both musically and financially, was most satisfactory. The band and chorus consisted of upwards of 70 performers. Miss Elizabeth Holdsworth, a very youthful singer, was highly successful in the principal soprano music, her rendering of the part of the Widow, and the air "Hear ye Israel" creating quite a sensation. Miss Fanny Lloyd sang the contralto music with much feeling, and Mr. John Lloyd in the tenor part displayed a good voice and style throughout, "If with all your hearts" being his most successful effort. Mr. W. H. Lloyd was thoroughly effective in the part of Elijah, the airs "Lord God of Abraham" and "It is enough" being especially appreciated by the audience. Miss Holdsworth, Miss F. M. Holdsworth, Mrs. Cook, and Messrs. T. B. Smith, C. Lawrence and A. Lloyd rendered efficient help in those numbers where extra solo parts were required. The choruses on the whole went well and steadily, some of them indeed—notably "Thanks be to God," "Woe to him," and "Behold, God the Lord"—being particularly worthy of mention. Mr. Holdsworth, as usual, conducted; and Mr. W. H. Haskins, the accompanist of the Society, presided with much ability at the pianoforte. There was a small but very efficient band, under the leadership of Mr. W. Sewell.

READING.—On Thursday evening, the 4th ult., a public performance on the new Organ just erected in Castle Street Congregational Chapel by Mr. Allen, of Bristol, took place. The fine qualities of the instrument were admirably tested, and Mr. Allen's extempore performance is deserving of especial mention. Mr. W. H. Strickland also played two solos, with his well-known ability, and Mr. Moore, Mr. H. J. Starke, and Mr. Davis contributed several selections.

SHEFFIELD.—The organ in the Music Hall, Surrey Street, which has been re-built and enlarged by Mr. John Stacey, of Howard Street, was played upon for the first time in the presence of the public, on Wednesday, the 10th ult. The opening of the organ was made the occasion of a treat to a large company, who assembled in the Music Hall, at the invitation of Mr. Freemantle, to hear a recital by his son, Mr. W. T. Freemantle. This young gentleman was formerly pupil of Mr. Young, the organist of Lincoln Cathedral, and deputy-organist there; and his début in Sheffield was of a most satisfactory character. The programme contained an excellent selection of classical music, including one of Mendelssohn's Sonatas and a Fugue by Bach. The audience could not fail to be thoroughly pleased with Mr. Freemantle's performance. He possesses a clear and distinct touch, and combined with a rapid execution he shows that he has a true artist's conception of what he plays. Two of the pieces were his own composition, and they show him to be a composer of no little merit. Both his compositions were listened to with the greatest attention, and Mr. Freemantle was loudly applauded at the termination.

SNARESBROOK.—The Wanstead Musical Union gave its fourth annual concert on Wednesday evening, the 10th ult., in the large hall of the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum the object being to assist the funds of that Institution. The first part comprised Handel's Dettingen Te Deum (given with full orchestral accompaniments), Haydn's "Surprise" Symphony, and the Overture to Il Barbiere. The second part consisted of solos, by Mrs. Marshall, Mrs. Gostling, and Messrs. Gardner, Newland, and B. Smith, and a selection from Sir J. Benedict's lyrical Legend, Undine. A couple of part-songs, "Softly fall the shades (Hatton), and "The dawn of day (Reay), completed the programme. As a whole the concert was very successful, and reflected great credit on the conductor, W. G. Brighten, Esq. Mr. Frank Bates was an excellent accompanist.

SOUTH NORWOOD.—On Wednesday, the 26th April, a Conversazione was held at the Public Hall. The musical part of the entertainment commenced with a solo on the pianoforte, well played by Miss Hedgecock. Some glees were also sung by a party of ladies and gentlemen, the most effective of which were "Hail, smiling morn," and "From Oberon in fairy land." A duet, "Hark! the goat bells ringing," by Misses L. S. Orton and Hedgecock, was highly successful, as was also "The Maid of Judah" by Miss Helen P. Catt, "Angels ever bright and fair" by Mrs. Green, and "Hearts of Oak" by Mr. Fred. Beddow, the latter receiving an unanimous encore.

ST. BEES.—Mr. Hamilton White's Vocal Class gave a concert in the Grammar School on the 2nd ult. Part-songs, choruses, &c., were so carefully rendered as amply to prove how much benefit had been derived from the lessons of the conductor. The selection from Mozart's Twelfth Mass, "The Gipsy Chorus" (Bohemian Girl) "The Market Chorus" (Masaniello,) "Comrades in arms," and the glee "By Celia's arbour," may be cited as worthy of special praise. Dussek's Sonata for violin and piano in B flat major, and Mozart's air with variations in D minor, were played by Herr A. Redner and Mr. H. White with much effect. Mr. H. White received great applause for his excellent performance of Weber's "L'Invitation à la Valse;" and Mr. W. White displayed much taste and purity of tone in a solo for the cornet, on themes from Norma. The concert was in every respect highly successful.

STRATFORD, ESSEX.—On Thursday, the 11th ult., the West Ham Philharmonic Society concluded its third season by a performance of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, with a selection of part-songs and other music. The chorus numbered upwards of fifty voices, and the singing throughout the evening was characterized by great precision and careful attention to expression. The solos were announced to be taken by the Misses C. Compton, F. and G. Jones, Mr. Colson Phillips, and Mr. Atherton Latta, but illness preventing Mr. Phillips from singing, the services of Mr. Albert James were obtained at the last moment. With the exception of the latter gentleman, who deserves special notice for his careful and musicianlike singing, the whole of the music was executed by members of the Society. In the second part, encores were insisted on for Miss F. Jones's "I'm a merry Zingara," and Mr. James's "Alice, where art thou?" Mr. Latta, who sang Molloy's "Vagabond" exceedingly well, was deservedly recalled, and gave Prince Poniatowski's new song, "The Yeoman's Wedding Day" with equal effect. The overture and pageant music in the May Queen were played as pianoforte duets by Messrs. Thomas and F. C. Kitson, the latter gentleman being hon. accompanist to the Society. Mr. J. S. Bates, the organist of the Parish Church, West

Ham, conducted as usual, and has reason to be proud of the progress which his Society has made during the comparatively short period it has been working.

STRATFORD-ON-AVON.—An amateur concert, in aid of the funds of the Shottery St. Andrew's Church, was given in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 16th ult., by the Ladies' Congregational Singing Class, assisted by members of the Parish Church Choir, several lady amateurs, and the Stratford-on-Avon Philharmonic Society. The first part of the programme was sacred, and consisted of selections from St. Paul, Elijah, and the Creation; and the second part was devoted to songs, duets, trios, &c., all of which were sung so well as to give the greatest satisfaction to a numerous and fashionable audience. The Rev. W. H. Connor was the conductor, and the accompaniments to the solos, &c., were played by Mr. Caseley, organist of the Parish Church, Stratford-on-Avon. The Rev. W. H. Connor and Mr. Caseley (both of whom contributed some vocal music during the evening) deserve great praise for the pains they have taken with the congregational singing classes; and as this was the first appearance of many of the ladies in public, they may be sincerely congratulated on their progress.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—A sacred concert, under distinguished patronage, was given to a crowded and fashionable audience in the Assembly Rooms on Tuesday evening, the 25th April, for the benefit of the Tunbridge Wells Dispensary and Infirmary. The band and chorus numbered about 70 performers. The soloists were Miss Charlotte Knight (soprano), Miss Knight (contralto), and Mr. Stedman (tenor). The instrumentalists—Mr. Whitehead (violin), Mr. White (contra basso), Miss Jenner (pianoforte), and Mr. Albert Lowe, Organist of St. Stephen's South Kensington, who presided at the harmonium. Mr. Henry Barry, Organist of Christ Church, conducted, and great credit is due to him for the success of the performance. The programme consisted of selections from the principal Oratorios, that from the Messiah occupying the first part. The choruses were sung with great effect, and special praise must be given to Miss C. Knight for her rendering of "I know that my Redeemer," and to Mr. Stedman for his singing of "Comfort ye," and "Every valley." The second part included selections from Elijah, Judas, the Creation, and Mozart's Twelfth Service. Miss C. Knight was most successful, gaining a well merited encore for her admirable singing of "With verdure clad," as did also Mr. Stedman, whose voice was heard to perfection in Haydn's air, "In native worth." The chorus, "The heavens are telling," terminated the concert. We must compliment Mr. Barry upon the success he has achieved. He has evidently bestowed much care in the training of his voices and we are glad to find that he has been secured as conductor to a new Choral Society, called "The Tunbridge Wells Musical Society," which has our best wishes for success.

TURNHAM GREEN.—The Apollo Vocal Union, assisted by Miss McQuire, gave a concert on the 19th ult. (by arrangement with the committee of the Turnham Green Choral Society), in the Girls' School, to a large audience. Miss McQuire, Mr. S. Talbot, Mr. Wilton, Mr. Knight, and Mr. Kent were highly successful in their vocal solos, several receiving encores. The glees were—"This pleasant month of May," "By Celia's arbour," "Oft when night," "What shall he have," "Strike the lyre," "The chafers" (encored), "Mynheer Van Dunck," "It was a lover," "The Cuckoo," "Come, silent evening" (encored), and "Banish, oh maiden." The performance was brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem, arranged for eight male voices.

WIMBORNE.—On the 27th April, a concert, in aid of the local coal fund, was given at the Corn Exchange, under the direction of Mr. Whitehead Smith, organist of the Minster. The principal vocalists were Miss Fanny Lenham, R.A.M., and Messrs. C. and T. Joyce, the choruses being sustained by the members of Mr. Smith's musical Society. The first part included a selection from Handel's Judas Maccabæus, the whole of which was well rendered, Miss Lanham, who has a remarkably sweet and flexible voice, being especially effective in the airs "Plous orgies," "Wise men flattering," and "From mighty kings," and Mr. T. Joyce giving the song "Arm, arm, ye brave," with much vigour. The choruses were sung with commendable precision throughout, and reflected the utmost credit upon the careful training of the conductor. The second part was miscellaneous, and included vocal solos by Miss Lanham and the Messrs. Joyce, several of which were encored. The Andante, Minuet, and Trio of Mozart's Quartet in D minor, for two violins, viola, and violoncello, were also well played by Messrs. A. Rowland (Southampton), J. Whitehead Smith, C. J. Read (Salisbury), and A. Guest (London), and received with much applause. Prior to the conclusion of the concert, the Rev. H. Good, senior priest vicar of the Minster, addressed a few words of hearty thanks to Mr. White-head Smith, for the trouble he had taken in organising and so successfully carrying out this undertaking in aid of local charity.

WORKINGTON.—On Friday evening, the 28th April, the Derwent Choral Society and String Band gave a concert in the Assembly Room, in aid of the funds of the Mechanics' Institution. The programme contained several choral pieces, all of which were excellently sung. Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song" especially being given with much precision and effect. Mr. Griffiths was encored in "Come where my love lies dreaming," which was sung with genuine musical expression. Dr. Douglas was highly successful in the recitative and air, "Comfort ye," and "Every valley," and Mr. Ditchburn created a marked effect in all his solos. Mr. Thomas Griffiths is entitled to great praise for the skilful manner in which he has trained the members of the Society; and the thanks voted to him by the chairman at the conclusion of the concert were thoroughly deserved.

WORTHING.—On Thursday, the 27th April, Mr. L. S. Palmer gave his first evening concert, Miss Jenny Pratt being principal vocalist, and Mr. Kuhe solo pianist. Mr. Henry Blagrove, who was advertised as violinist, being unable to attend on account of severe illness, Mdme. Sydney Pratten very ably filled the gap by playing two solos on the guitar, both of which were encored. Miss Jenny Pratt sang with much feeling a song from Dinorah, and Sullivan's "Looking back;" and Miss Burden was also successful in a song by E. Thurnam, "Let her depart." Mr. Kuhe played, with much effect, Beethoven's Sonata No. 3, Rubinstein's Melody in F, and several of his own compositions. The Glee and Madrigal Union gave one or two of our best old madrigals, and a new one by the conductor. Miss Palmer, Mr. Cooke, and Mr. Jaeckel accompanied, and Mr. L. S. Palmer conducted.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Herbert Leach to the Parish Church of Westbury, Wilts.——Mr. Thomas Bensted, Organist and Choirmaster, to Allhallow's, Lombard Street.——Mr. B. Bather to Grange-over-Sands, Lancashire.——Mr. E. T. Gibbons, Organist and Choirmaster to All Saints' Church, Benhilton, Sutton, Surrey.——Mr. David Strong, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's, Aldermanbury.——Mr. E. C. D. Gilmore, to St. John's Church, Maidstone.——Mr. Ingle Berron, Organist and Choirmas er to the Parish Church, Wes hpool.

CHOIR APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. H. Mackenzie Cadman, Bass, and Mr. George Taylor, Tenor, of St. John's, Hammersmith, to the Choir of St. Michael's and All Angels, North Kensington.

NOVELLO'S OCTAVO EDITION OF ANTHEMS.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. beg to announce that they are now issuing in the octavo form, a series of Anthems by the greatest Modern Composers, principally selected from their extensive Catalogue, and also including new works of undoubted merit. The preference shown by the musical public for small Scores over the separate vocal parts, has been so marked as to warrant the publishers in anticipating a more than usually large circulation for the Edition.

The issue commenced with the new year, and will be continued in Weekly Numbers, at Twopence, Threepence, Fourpence or Sixpence each, according to their length.

Twenty-six Numbers will form a Volume, which will be published half-yearly.

Many of the best known and most favourite Anthems which have hitherto been only obtainable in the large and comparatively expensive Folio size, will thus be brought within the reach of all.

It is also intended to include in this series, Anthems by Ancient Composers, but these will always be issued in twenty-six consecutive numbers, so as to form a separate Volume.

The following Anthems are now in course of publication:—

VESPER CANTICLES. New, simple, and effective Settings. Six numbers ready, price 1d. each. By J. M. BENTLEY. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.

". . . . Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services." . . . . they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.

"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Fowle's Musical Journal.
London: Novello, Ewer and Co., or the Composer, Burnley.

HEMY'S ROYAL MODERN PIANOFORTE TUTOR. Price Five Shillings.

The Daily Telegraph of May 24th, speaking of this popular work, says:—

"If everybody having access to a piano be not a pianist, the reason lies elsewhere than in a want of instruction books. So many are these helps to efficiency, that it is hard to believe in a speciality for each; and, as a matter of fact, one very much resembles another. A distinction must be made, however, in favour of Mr. H. F. Hemy's 'Royal Modern Tutor,' which aims chiefly to pave a royal road to the art of counting time, and of properly connecting the parts for both hands. 'This the author trusts he has accomplished,' to quote his own words, 'by inserting the time figured between the treble and bass clef staves, and connecting the notes required to be played by each hand, and the mode of counting together—thus presenting the whole to the eye in so clear a form as to be intelligible to the youngest child learning music.' The plan is simple and ingenious, representing, perhaps, as much help as can be given in a difficult part of the student's course. In other respects, the book is one of merit. Its instructions are clear, and a proper graduation of the lessons is carefully observed. We should add that a new and well-got-up edition has been issued by Messrs. Metzler and Co."

A specimen copy sent post-free for 34 stamps.

ON THE VALUE OF THE DISSONANCE IN MUSICAL THEORY.

By Joseph Green, (Author of the "Tritone.")

The characteristic of modern music is a particular harmonic relation called the key; producing what we generally understand by the term "modern tonality." The key is certainly a recent discovery; but the supposition that it is a thing invented by musicians, as they would invent a scale or any arbitrary arrangement of notes, has resulted even to this day in different appreciations of its importance in musical theory.

The key was strongly represented in the tetrachordal system of the ancients. But the mode of construction, and what we know of the employment by the Greeks of the diatonic scales is the best evidence we possess that they were unacquainted with harmonic effects beyond those derived from the simplest combinations. And early in the Christian era, when the traditions of Greek music must have been comparatively fresh, the diatonic scales were not only retained, but subsequently reformed at the instigation of St. Gregory, in a sense which was a still wider departure from the principle of tonality derived from harmonic relation; that is to say, in the Plagal Church modes the principle of tonality was less apparent than in the original authentic modes. This however was only the accidental result of a certain artificial device; for in point of fact there were no essential differences between any of the church modes or any of the Greek scales. The differences which did exist, namely, in the order of tones and semitones, could not of themselves, and independently of general harmonic relation constitute any real theoretical distinction.

To adopt a medical illustration, the ancient theorists and their more modern imitators confined themselves too closely in their musical disquisitions to the physiology of the subject; and the practice of the musicians was hampered by their precepts. Recent theorists have on the other hand, by the study of the pathology of the question, built up an art which is disparaged as empirical, but is nevertheless more true to nature.

The starting point of the harmonicians, as it still is of our modern physicists, was the well known fact that the simpler the fraction representing the ratio of a musical interval, the more perfect is the consonance. They naturally enough looked upon the consonance as the normal condition, and the dissonance as the abnormal condition in music. Hence from very ancient times to that of Guido Aretino, and again five or six centuries beyond to the supposed innovations of Monteverde and the subsequent invention of the series of keys, we find the gradual progress of harmony illustrated in a cautious departure from the unisonal system, and finally by the slow admission into the art, firstly of the perfect concords; secondly, the imperfect concords; and lastly, of the dissonance. And moreover, even up to a comparatively late period, the art has been encumbered with a systematic avoidance, or with a tenderness in the treatment of a dissonant interval called the tritonus—an interval later musicians have found not only inoffensive, but the one above all others which contains the dynamical principle, the principle of life, motion and reproduction in harmony. In what Mr. Karl Engel calls the pentatonic, or in any other ancient scale, or possible system of music where the tritone is wanting, the effects must be at once rigid and vague; suggestive of the monuments and the mysticism of that old world from which we, in common with the Greeks, and the Hebrews before them, have probably received the partially comprehended rudiments of a musical method. The same vagueness and want of repose is sensibly felt in the "diatonic scales," where following the Greek system, the tritone is present, but pinioned to a fixed place in the system, and doing duty as indicator of the position of the semitones in relation to the initial notes of the different modes or scales, which are made to pass under it like so many horizontal slides. The church modes are founded on that method;* with the additional complication of giving the same finals, or nominal key-notes, to the four plagal modes, as to the four authentic. But by the modern and more simple harmonic system all the modes are easily reduced to the one natural scale, or to one of the two modern modes to which the tritone employed is proper. This becomes still more apparent by the transposition of the Gregorian tones, said to be formed on the diatonic scales. Dissecting the tones or tunes, and reducing them to the modern tonality, we find they are formed by arbitrarily joining together the tetrachords of different scales, and of different modes. Their vagueness and solemnity, so appropriate to the service of religion, are due in part to that diversity, and want of fixation of key and mode in the various endings, and as far as the solemnity is concerned to the monotony of the effects produced by the limitation of the compass of the melodic phrases, the ambit of which is in point of theory tetrachordal. In choir practice it depends upon the arbitrarily chosen dominant, around which note, as a pivot, the melody is made more or less to revolve.

In regard to the Greek system it is more than probable that if ever the mystery is to be unravelled, the task will be accomplished by the guidance of modern lights, and by trying back from the technical to the abstract theories.

The difficulties of the subject may in part be ascribed to the fragmentary and purely theoretical nature of the writings of the ancient harmonicians that are extant. But it is quite as likely that the difficulties were attributable to inherent defects in the Greek methods; and as some one has once observed, were a musician of the time of Pericles restored to us to explain the practice of his art, it is possible we should not be much wiser than we are at present, except that certain suspicions would be converted into certainties, and we should have the positive assurance as to the superior simplicity and comprehensiveness of the modern system.

* In regard to the whole question as to the affinity between the Greek music and that of the primitive church, I venture no opinion. For my technical purposes, the acknowledged facts as related in modern works are sufficient. The differences which do exist between the Ambrosian and Greek octaves disappear with many other distinctions when brought to the modern test of the harmonic basis of the scale; and as I have suggested in the text, the Gregorian additions were a retrogression towards the Greek forms. There is in this question, even in our day, a theological or rather sectarian element very dangerous to historical or scientific truth. And from the little knowledge I have of the subject, I presume that the controversies at the present time, turn as they seem to have done in the days of Arius and of St. Ambrose, on the origin of the melodies employed in the liturgy. But amongst the general public the matter becomes mystified by a certain confusion in our common terminology. The words scales, modes, tones and tunes we all of us employ without much care as to their precise meaning.

That system, in regard to theory, is an example of a retrogression from the complex to the simple; a retrogression which the living writer who has identified his name with the evolution theory, has told us, is at a certain phase of the process of evolution, a general and looked-for result. But modern musical theory has not altogether receded towards that of the ancients; it has only worked downwards by other ways, and finally rested on the same physical or mental facts of our nature to which the ancients had to conform, whilst they nominally ignored them.

These natural facts have their musical illustration, firstly, in the resolution of a dissonant interval, and finally, in the more complex harmonic combination known as the key, which proceeds from that resolution. The key, as a natural product of sensation, however much its causes may yet escape analysis, is as distinct and immutable a natural fact, as are the common phenomena of consonance and dissonance which have lately been reduced to a very simple physiological explanation by M. Helmholtz.

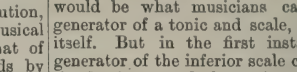
It has long since been ascertained that the difference between an ordinary sound and a musical sound depends upon the secondary vibrations called "harmonics," produced by the subdivisions of the vibrating substance, over and above the fundamental vibrations of its whole length or contents.

Not counting replicates, which are repetitions of the fundamental note in a different pitch or octave, the harmonics beyond the first two are mostly dissonant with the fundamental note, which with its first three distinct harmonics, constitute practically a complete dissonant chord, as the combination comprises all the typical consonances and dissonances. Were these harmonics as perceptible to our senses as the fundamental sound, the resulting dissonant combination would imperatively demand a resolution into a consonant chord; and we know by common technical principles in music that such resolution to be satisfactory must be on a chord whose fundamental note is four degrees higher in a diatonic scale than the original sound.

To a certain extent, difficult to define owing to the varying capacity of the sense of hearing in different persons, the harmonics are audible, and are distinguishable from the fundamental sound. They might therefore affect the mind not only in regard to timbre or quality as in one musical sound, but also as a combination of sounds. It perhaps requires no great stretch either of the imagination or of scientific method to concede that from the complex nature of an individual sound, the relativity, which is the essence of music, commences with the monosound itself;* and the fixed relation of an apparently abstract musical sound is to another distant from it a fourth in the ascending scale; affording as it were a faint reflection of the common technical and harmonic process by which in music the key is established.

Hence, on such an assumption, every single sound would be what musicians call a dominant,—the generator of a tonic and scale, rather than the tonic itself. But in the first instance it is only the generator of the inferior scale called the tetrachord; the dominant and the tonic comprising the interval of a fourth, which is afterwards filled up by intervening notes according to mode or genus. The complete scale formed by the joining of two tetrachords would not therefore be an arbitrary or mathematical pre-arrangement of the notes, but on the contrary, a result of a prior and natural harmonic phenomenon.

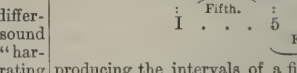
The octave being a replicate and obvious completion of a scale, the first technical process, and the first clear indication of the key, is the division of the diapason by the introduction of a fifth, thus:



producing the intervals of a fifth and fourth. The figure 5, that destroys the original relation of the monosound and its replicate, represents the dominant which invokes the tonic No. I, or key note, four degrees higher.

The above division is called by the harmonicians, arithmetical; the numeral representatives of the divisions being in arithmetical progression, as 2, 3, 4.

Taking the fourth first in order, thus:



the division of the diapason is harmonical, the numerals being in harmonic progression, as 3, 4, 6. But the two divisions musically considered are precisely the same in principle, the one being the inversion of the other. In the latter diagram the No. 4 becomes the tonic, and the dominant is represented by the figure I. In other words, of the extreme notes of the separate interval of a fifth the lower note is the tonic, and the upper note the dominant of a certain scale and key. Of a fourth, the inversion of a fifth, the upper note is the tonic and the lower note is the dominant.

From these explanations it is clear that on the supposition that every individual sound is in musical relation a dominant or fifth of a scale, it is only the first-mentioned division of the diapason into diapente and diatessaron that need be taken into account in regard to one particular key. The harmonical divisions of the same scale into diatessaron and diapente changes the key. For instance, the division C—G—C is the key and scale of C. The division C—F—C is the key and scale of F. But if we take the original division, and invert the position of the notes commencing on the fifth, thus: we have the harmonical division of the scale of G♮, but in the key of C♮. And this latter division represents what are called the Plagal modes, which, according to modern theories, are simply inverted positions of the authentic. The Gregorian re-

* In the language of popular science, each musical sound is as a fundamental note the "chief of a faction." Two sounds with their separate corteges of harmonics represent strife and disagreement ending in certain cases in silence caused by the interference of different sound waves. The complex materials of a single sound are decomposed prismatically by the organ of hearing: and the mind receives, without analysis, one general impression, just as we accept the sensation of red or blue without analysing the mixture of colours comprehended in any single colorific effect. Concord is only a relative expression, and is represented in music by the octave. All other intervals are more or less distinctly dissonant, and proceed in a regular gradation of dissonance from the fifth or fourth to the tritone and semitone. This general principle as to the relative perfection of consonance in the octave and the comparative dissonance of other intervals as explained by Helmholtz, must be so familiar to the reader, through Dr. Tyndall's lectures, that I do not think it necessary to reproduce the mere series of harmonics by which it is demonstrated.

formers of the Church music seem to have had an inkling of the truth when they assigned to one of both series of modes the same finals. But in all probability their arrangement was an accidental departure from an intended imitation of Greek methods, and was determined only by considerations of pitch and other practical requirements of the quire; otherwise they would have proceeded still further, and have reduced all the eight modes to one key.

A recent French writer on the music of the Greeks has, in common with many others before his time, expressed a regret that the ancients should have obstinately based their system on the interval of a fourth instead of a fifth. It is thought that had their attention been first directed to the latter interval, they could not have failed to penetrate the secrets of the science we now call harmony. But such opinions seem to indicate very arbitrary notions in respect both to the Greek and modern systems. The two systems are in fact identical in principle, as far as that principle is apparent in the construction of one scale. The modern series of keys is simply a question of the displacement of the tritone. It being understood that the system of the ancients was melodic, their instinctive preference for the "fourth" is easy to comprehend. And inasmuch as relatively the fourth is more dissonant than the fifth, it was more likely, from that cause alone, to lead them in the direction of modern improvements. From the glimpses we can obtain of Greek theory and practice, we see occasional efforts to burst through the restraints of a fixed diatonic and tonal system; but there are no traces of the abandonment of the tetrachordal basis which has survived during so many centuries, and now adapts itself to modern harmony. The pentatonic scale, whose antiquity seems to defy research as to its origin, must have been well known to the Greeks. That imperfect and emasculated scale was, if based upon anything, based upon the interval of the fifth. The Greeks, perhaps, instinctively rejected that scale; and we, in our time, have certainly either to alter the melodies founded upon it, or make them conform to modern usage, and to natural phenomena in the harmonization.

When the Greek philosophers united the arithmetical and harmonical divisions, and formed the scale by two disjunct tetrachords, thus:

the musicians must have been on the verge of anticipating subsequent discoveries, and adopting a system of harmony and temperament. That they did not do so, was probably due to the backwardness of the mechanical arts, to their cumbrous system of notation, and perhaps to an unreasoning conservatism characteristic of their craft. The skeleton scale, as it is formed in the diagram above, really includes three keys. If we sing the melody of a complete and diatonic tetrachord in ascending C, D, E, F, we find the natural repose is on the F, as the key note. Again, if we take the tetrachord in descending F, E, D, C, the repose is on the C, giving to each tetrachord two tonics, according as we employ it in ascending or descending. This melodic illustration of the key depends for its effect upon the harmonic process already described, and which underlies the Greek system. In the ascending tetrachord, the initial note is the fifth or dominant of a complete scale; and in the descending tetrachord, the dominant understood is four notes below. The subject is made plainer in the following diagram, showing the heptachord formed by conjunct tetrachords:

giving three distinct tonics, the final notes of each tetrachord in ascending and descending.

When we exceed the limits of the tetrachord we have no further repose or indication of key until we arrive at the completion of the second tetrachord in a scale of conjunct tetrachords, or at the octave in a scale of disjunct tetrachords. The interval of the fifth has no melodic repose; and even as an harmonic interval its repose, though greater than the fourth, is inferior to the octave, the only true consonance. The fifth and fourth, as already shown, when they consist of the same notes but in a different pitch, as C to G or G to C, have more or less the same harmonic value. The superior melodic value of the complete tetrachord in the diatonic system was a sufficient reason for its adoption by the Greeks.

The wonderfully simple discovery of the moderns, of repeating the same arrangement of disjunct tetrachords in different degrees of pitch, comprehends all that was useful in the various modes adopted by the ancients of filling up the two tetrachordal divisions.

Comparing the ancient and modern systems as both finally reposing on the same harmonic process, and facts of sensation, we can dispense with the well worn allusions to minute dieses, the employment of which could not alter the functions of an harmonic combination any more than the subdivision of the octave into twenty or forty degrees instead of twelve, would add a single chord generically distinct from the combinations already known. A more minute and mathematical subdivision would only make certain chords more in tune, and repeat existing phenomena by multiplying the number of keys, whilst some of those we have nominally in the list are impracticable in regard to signature and notation. And in modulating for instance from C♯ to D♭, the absolute difference even on a violin is almost inappreciable. The difference which does exist depends upon the context and general key relationship, and is often due more to the imagination than to fact. The idea of adding variety to modulation as far as the harmony is concerned, by employing a number of keys differing in pitch less than a semitone, is difficult to realize. Small intervals like a comma, or even an enharmonic diesis, perceptible enough in a slow strain of melody in unison, cannot affect in the slightest degree the generic nature of a whole chord, the natural functions of which depend upon tonal relation, and causes more complex in operation, but more simple in theory than abstract mathematical measurements. As I now wish to show, the key and therefore the functions of intervals and chords depend upon the dissonance, implied or expressed in all combinations.

In endeavouring to establish a theory of sensation, it is sometimes asserted that consonance is generated by dissonance, because the first follows the latter in obedience to a natural desire for the resolution of a dissonant interval. But so broad an assertion is evidently an example of a common error in logic.

On the other hand, consonance as represented by the one consonant interval, the octave, may be considered the normal condition to the ear, as white light is to the eye. But neither consonance nor white light has in the abstract any real value. Our impressions of both are relative; and art, either in sounds or colours commences with a first departure from the normal condition. Hence, though it be wrong to assert that consonance is generated by dissonance, it may be right to maintain that the basis, the starting point of a true technical theory of music, is the dissonance. The Greeks, by reason of the unisonal nature of their music, overlooked the importance of the dissonance, thus preparing an obvious defect and void in their system, otherwise so ingenious and so firmly braced on a framework, consisting of the extreme notes of the tetrachord.

It may be said that the musical system of the Greeks bore some resemblance to their notions of astronomy. Everything in the system was flat and horizontal, neatly riveted to supports whose foundation was purely hypothetical. The system had no centre of attraction, by a reference to which their artificial modes and scales could be tested and adjusted. The moderns possess that test in the harmonic relation called the key, powerfully represented by one single interval, the tritone, which determines the tonic, and, less directly, the mode.

The subject is too trite, and the details would be too technical for present purposes, to describe the devices by which the ancients avoided that interval, or the terms they employed to distinguish the regular from the augmented tetrachord, containing three whole tones, which formed the tritonus. Their rejection of it was natural, as it immediately destroyed the only representative they had of key in the melodic effect of the tetrachord. The same instinct of harmony no doubt led the musicians to reject many of the genera concocted by philosophers, who divided and tortured the melodic disposition of the moveable notes of the tetrachord, till finally, as some people imagine, the ancient Greek music reappeared in the more simple Gregorian tones. Whatever may have been the origin of those tones, it can be presumed they may have come to us through the Greeks, though they were not of Greek invention any more, perhaps, than was the natural diatonic scale, which the mathematicians only rearranged according to their system. Mr. Engel tells us that the so-called pentatonic scale was in existence among nations whose history is anterior to the era of Greek legends. There is, however, no sufficient ground for supposing even that scale to have been the primitive one. It seems, on the contrary, to be rather an artificial result of the manipulation of the natural major and diatonic scale, by the simple excision of the two tritonic notes si, fa, and probably, for melodic reasons, akin to those which subsequently led to the more prominent features of the Greek scheme.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

In any doubt existed as to the possibility of permanently establishing a triennial festival in honour of Handel, it must have been thoroughly dispelled by the unexampled success, both in an artistic and a pecuniary point of view, of the fourth celebration given during the past month, like its predecessors, at the Crystal Palace. We are not of those who believe that the greater the number of executants in a musical work, the greater must be the effect, nor are we by any means disposed to endorse the assertion, so often advanced, that Handel would have been in an ecstasy of delight could he have lived to hear his compositions with every part, vocal and instrumental, multiplied ad infinitum in the choral portions, whilst the solos are sung precisely as he wrote them; but such a magnificent demonstration as that presented at this triennial festival has perhaps scarcely a right to be judged purely on artistic grounds, for there is something to be seen as well as to be heard when upwards of four thousand performers assemble, under the experienced direction of one mind, to render homage to a genius, the admiration for whose works in the land of his adoption time has deepened almost into a worship.

Although at all these festivals three days only are devoted to the performances, the Rehearsal has now become a recognised fourth day, for not only are tickets sold to the public on this occasion, but a kind of programme is duly considered, many pieces which are too familiar to need rehearsal at all being given, to satisfy those who naturally expect to hear the choicest specimens to be sung during the festival. Little therefore need be said of this preliminary performance, which took place on Friday the 16th ult., and was attended by a large audience. The selection included some of the finest choruses from the "Messiah," "Solomon," and "Israel in Egypt," the whole of the "Dettingen Te Deum," the Organ Concerto in G (a most welcome novelty) performed by Mr. W. T. Best, and several solos, which brought all the principal vocalists forward, with the exception of Mr. Sims Reeves, who was unfortunately too hoarse to attend.

On the first day of the festival, Monday the 19th ult., the "Messiah," as usual, attracted an enormous audience, every available place being occupied. The Oratorio was preceded by the National Anthem, which was given with the full orchestra and chorus, as arranged by Sir Michael Costa, and had a fine effect. Unfortunately Handel's original manuscript of the "Messiah" has become so familiar lately to the general public that everybody is beginning to ask why the Sacred Harmonic Society (through whose exertions the fac-similes of the manuscript score were scattered abroad) still persists in deviating from the expressed intention of the composer by assigning the air "But who may abide" to a contralto, instead of a bass voice, and by transposing the second part of the soprano air "He shall feed His flock" to suit a contralto. We have alluded to this matter before in our notices of the Oratorio at the Three Choir Festivals; but, although it may be answered that the conductors at these performances are timid in disturbing traditional readings, this reason can hardly apply at a festival especially promoted to glorify Handel by the Sacred Harmonic Society, and we shall be glad indeed if this Association (to which the lovers of sacred music already owe such a deep debt of gratitude) would initiate a reform of these and some other abuses which could be pointed out did our space permit. The principal parts in the "Messiah" were excellently given by Madlle. Titiens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby (Mr. Sims Reeves being still indisposed), Mr. Kerr Gedge and Mr. Santley. With few exceptions, the choruses were delivered with extraordinary vigour and precision, "For unto us," the "Hallelujah," and the final chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb," bringing out the power of the vast choir to the utmost advantage. A violent storm of rain at one time caused a short cessation of the performance, and even marred a solo by Mr. Vernon Rigby; but the effect upon the audience soon passed away, and Mr. Rigby deserves every commendation for his perfect self possession under the somewhat trying circumstances.

Wednesday was the "Selection" day; and a programme of unusual interest was provided. The performance commenced with the "Dettingen Te Deum," a work which, being almost exclusively choral, it is needless to say was magnificently rendered throughout. The effect created by the movement "To Thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do cry," the supplicating chorus

"We therefore pray Thee, help Thy servants," and all those choral pieces in which the solo trumpet parts are woven in with the voices, proved unmistakably that although a composition written for a special occasion, this "Te Deum" must take rank with the enduring creations of its author, even when nothing but its name can recall the event which it celebrates. The few solos in the work were excellently sung by Mr. Santley. After the performance of the "Te Deum," Mr. W. T. Best played the Organ Concerto to which we have already alluded, with orchestral accompaniments, and contrary, we believe, to the expectation of many, produced an extraordinary effect with the audience. It is good indeed that music so purely and conscientiously written should be occasionally brought forward, if only to prove that mere meretricious display was studiously avoided even by those great masters whose executive power might well have tempted them beyond the legitimate province of their art. Mr. Best's performance of this concerto was entitled to the highest praise; and the cadenza of his own which he introduced showed that he could think thoroughly in the spirit of Handel, the themes of the composition being skilfully and artistically reproduced, and woven in with some clever original passages. The miscellaneous selection which followed was full of interest, but as the choral effects are those for which the festival has become so justly celebrated, it became almost a matter of regret that so many solos were introduced. Of course Mr. Sims Reeves's magnificent delivery of the recitative and air "Deeper and deeper still," and "Waft her, angels," produced, as it deserved, the most enthusiastic applause; and the same may be said of "Farewell, ye limpid springs," by Madlle. Titiens; "O had I Jubal's lyre," by Madame Sinico; "Call forth thy powers" (from "Judas Maccabæus") by Mr. Vernon Rigby; "Let me wander not unseen," by Mr. Cummings, and the fine air, "Nasce al bosco" (from the Opera of "Ezio") by Mr. Santley; but all these finished specimens of vocalisation can only be thoroughly enjoyed in a smaller space, the chorus "Ye sons of Israel," from "Joshua," gaining perhaps additional effect by the contrast with the solos which preceded it. The second part contained a very excellent selection from "Solomon," including the double choruses, "Your harps and cymbals sound," "From the censer," and "Praise the Lord," all of which were marvellous examples of decision and accuracy in every department, "From the censer," more especially being sung with a power and unity of tone rarely equalled. The chorus, "May no rash intruder," was also highly effective, and indeed narrowly escaped an encore. The solos were well sung by Madame Sinico, Madame Patey and Mr. Cummings. Madame Patey's delivery of the air "What though I trace," and Mr. Cummings's artistic rendering of the Recitative and Air "Thrice happy king," and "Golden columns," being much applauded. The audience had thinned to an extraordinary degree before the conclusion of the performance, which, considering that it commenced at two o'clock, and did not terminate until half past six, was perhaps scarcely to be wondered at.

The great Choral Oratorio "Israel in Egypt," on the third day (Friday) was given with a sublimity which almost disarms criticism; and the Sacred Harmonic Society (through whose zeal this work was restored to its original shape, and repeatedly given at the Society's concerts) has indeed a right to congratulate itself upon the firm hold it has now taken upon the public. The chain of choruses in the first part, especially the "Hailstone," which received an encore not to be resisted, produced an overwhelming effect upon the audience impossible to describe; and in the second part "Thou sentest forth," "The people shall hear" and the final triumphal choral piece, "The horse and his rider," went with a precision which it would scarcely be imagined could be attained without a greater number of rehearsals than can ever be practicable with so large a body of vocalists collected from various parts of the country. The solos in this Oratorio appear less prominent than their worth would entitle them to, from the gigantic nature of the choruses; but exception must be made in favour of "The enemy said," which, as declaimed by Mr. Sims Reeves, is made one of the most important features of the work. We have already exhausted all our powers of expressing upon paper our admiration of this unexampled piece of vocal declamation on the occasion of Mr. Reeves's singing of the air when "Israel in Egypt" was performed this season at the "Oratorio Concerts," and can now therefore only add that at the Handel Festival if he did not give a finer rendering of the song, it was simply because such a result was impossible. The applause of the audience could scarcely be restrained within reasonable limits, and it was some time before Sir Michael Costa could subdue the enthusiasm of the delighted listeners. The other solos were most effectively given by Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Rudersdorff and Patey, Mr. Kerr Gedge, Mr. Santley and Signor Foli; the showy duet, "The Lord is a man of war" (by Mr. Santley and Signor Foli) receiving an encore, Madame Patey obtaining well deserved applause in the air "Thou shalt bring them in," and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington declaiming the notes leading to the final chorus with thrilling effect. It only remains to record that the orchestra was throughout the festival everything that could be desired; that Sir Michael Costa conducted with a skill and energy which contributed largely to the success of the performances, and that Mr. J. Coward presided most efficiently at the organ.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

MADLLE. MARIMON, of whom we made such favourable mention on her first appearance as Amina, in "La Sonnambula," has fully realised the expectations of her most ardent admirers in her second part, Maria, in "La Figlia del Reggimento." Both as a singer and an actress, she is fully entitled to take the highest rank; and indeed we may safely affirm that since the days of Jenny Lind, no such enthusiasm has been displayed at either of our lyrical establishments as greeted the new Maria on the fall of the curtain, when she was compelled to repeat the finale (an interpolated valse, from one of Ricci's operas) and to appear four times before the delighted audience. Throughout the opera Madlle. Marimon sang and acted with that perfect confidence in her own powers which is the surest sign of artistic excellence. Full of vivacity, but without a tinge of coarseness, she produced equal effect as the natural vivandière and the artificial lady; the "Ciascun lo dice" and "Convien partir" (in which she takes leave of the regiment) showing how thoroughly her heart was in her military life; and her restlessness and impatience during the singing-lesson scene proving how earnestly she yearned for her former friends, whilst struggling to submit to fashionable restraint. As a mere example of the purest florid vocalisation, the finale was a marvel of excellence; the series of brilliant passages, each of enormous difficulty, culminating in a shake on the D sharp in alt, being thrown off with an ease which proved how thoroughly her voice was under control in every part of its register. The Sulpizio of Signor Agnesi was in every respect a fine performance, but Signor Fancelli produced but little effect in the part of Tonio. We need only refer to the début of Madlle. Canissa, as Margherita in Gounod's "Faust," in order to express our astonishment that any lady so utterly disqualified for such an undertaking should have so far passed the ordeal of preliminary criticism as to be permitted to sing. M. Capoul, who made his first appearance as Faust, achieved a decided success. He has a thoroughly French style; but his good voice and correct intonation will assuredly make him a favourite in some of the first tenor parts, in spite of a redundancy of gesture which somewhat mars the effect of his impassioned passages. M. Rives, also a new comer, showed much talent in the part of Mephistopheles, notwithstanding that he was labouring under the effects of hoarseness, and Signor Moriami was a careful and painstaking Valentin. The revival of Meyerbeer's "Roberto il Diavolo" introduced M. Belval in the part of Bertram, for the first time on the Italian stage. He has a remarkably fine voice, acts well, and is likely, we think, to obtain as high a position in this country as he has for some time held in Paris.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THERE has been no need of any novelty at this house, the operas and vocalists already established in public favour, attracting large audiences at each performance. Meyerbeer's "L'Étoile du Nord" and "L'Africaine" have been revived; the Caterina of Madame Patti and the Peter the Great of M. Faure in the former work, and the Selika of Madlle. Pauline Lucca and Vasco di Gama of M. Naudin, in the latter, being in every respect highly satisfactory. Signor Mario has been received with enthusiasm in all his characters, his singing of Fernando, in Donizetti's "La Favorita," being so excellent as to cause him to repeat the character, at the express desire, we believe, of many of the subscribers. In spite of his waning voice, Signor Mario's final retirement from the operatic stage will cause a feeling of regret with many of the frequenters of the Royal Italian Opera.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

AT the fifth concert, on the 22nd May, Schubert's Symphony (No. 9) was excellently given, but scarcely succeeded in rousing the audience to anything like enthusiasm. So attractive, however, are the subjects in this work, and so skilful the greater portion of the writing, that in spite of a certain amount of diffuseness, the Symphony can hardly fail eventually to take its position amongst the orchestral compositions which have an annual place in the programmes of this Society. The Italian Symphony, of Mendelssohn, went admirably, especially the vivacious Saltarello, which was performed with a decision and playfulness rarely equalled. A feature in the concert was Madame Norman-Neruda's artistic rendering of Beethoven's Violin Concerto; and the orchestral Introduction and Fugue of Mozart, was welcome both for its excellence and novelty. Mr. Bentham was heard to advantage in Mozart's "Un aura amorosa," and Madame Sinico sang well, as she always does; but we cannot think Verdi's "Ernani involami" a judicious piece to choose for a classical concert. The sixth concert on the 5th ult., included Mr. Cipriani Potter's highly dramatic overture to "Cymbeline," which it appears extraordinary to find is still in manuscript. The audience seemed, however, fully to recognise its worth; and not only showed their appreciation of its merits by prolonged applause, but insisted upon the composer appearing to acknowledge this public testimony of his talent. An interesting item in the programme was the performance of one of Paganini's difficult and showy concertos for the violin, by Signor Sivori, who appeared thoroughly to enjoy the eccentricities of the composition, and mastered the passages with an ease which elicited the warmest marks of approbation. Mozart's Symphony in G minor, and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, were the principal orchestral works; and the vocalists were Madame Sinico and Madame Trebelli-Bettini. The seventh concert was given on the 19th ult., Haydn's Symphony in C (Letter R), and Beethoven's, in B flat, receiving a most careful and highly finished rendering, under the intelligent conductorship of Mr. Cusins. Madame Arabella Goddard played, with the most perfect executive power and artistic feeling, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor, and was overwhelmed with applause. Viotti's clever, but somewhat antiquated Violin Concerto was well performed by Herr Straus; and M. Capoul gave the eternal "Salve dimora" so excellently as to receive an unanimous encore. The other vocalists were Madlle. Titiens and Madlle. Ilma de Murska.

THE Triennial Festival of the Handel and Haydn Society at Boston has been a decided success. Madame Rudersdorff and Mr. W. H. Cummings, who were specially engaged for the performances, have made a highly favourable impression, the local press being most enthusiastic in their praise. The Evening Post says that Mr. Cummings's delivery of the passage "Watchman, will the night soon pass?" in the Hymn of Praise, literally thrilled the audience; and equal commendation is given to him for his rendering of "Sound an alarm," "Deeper and deeper still," and other well known solos. One of the most important features in the Festival was a Selection from Bach's "Passion Music" (St. Matthew), which appears to have been excellently sung and thoroughly appreciated.

WE regret that our space will not allow us to notice at length the Cologne Musical Festival, which commenced on Whit Sunday, under the experienced direction of Dr. Hiller. Amongst the works selected Handel's strangely neglected Oratorio, "Joshua," appears to have been one of the most successful performances, the choruses especially being finely given; and the singing of Frau Joachim producing a marked effect upon the audience. Herr Joachim's playing of the ninth concerto of Spohr elicited an extraordinary amount of enthusiasm, the artist being perfectly overwhelmed with flowers, a compliment also paid to Frau Joachim for her excellent rendering of songs by Schubert, Mendelssohn and Schumann. Dr. Hiller's Hymn, composed in honour of the German victories, was triumphantly successful; and at the last concert, after a repetition, by desire, of one of the most masterly choruses in the work, a wreath was placed upon his head, amidst a flourish of trumpets, and the applause was both enthusiastic and unanimous.

MR. HENRY M. ROWLAND gave an evening concert at Westbourne Grove, Bayswater, on Friday evening, the 16th ult., assisted by Madame Suchet Champion, Mr. Suchet Champion, Miss Sophie Stuart (his pupil), Miss Matilda Scott, Miss Kate Byrne, Miss Edith Carleton, Miss Annie Hobdell, Herr Otto Booth, and Mr. Frederick Scarsbrook, all of whom were thoroughly successful. Mr. Rowland has a good baritone voice, and his singing was much appreciated.

A PRIVATE evening concert, by the Highbury Hill Choral Society, took place on the 9th ult., at Wellington Hall, Islington. The admissions were by cards of invitation, and a crowded and fashionable audience assembled on the occasion. The chorus singing was very effective, and received signal recognition. Miss M. A. Pocklington assisted in the solo music, and made a very favourable impression. Mr. N. Neville, organist of St Peter's, London Docks, presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. Milton Clarke, of Tottenham, conducted.

MR. P. E. VAN NOORDEN gave a "Concert d'Invitation," at the Beethoven Rooms, on Tuesday the 30th May, assisted by his pupils and the following artists: Miss Patti Laverne, Madame F. Eldon, Messrs. C. Lane, Bolton and Theodore Distin. Madame Eldon sang "O rest in the Lord" with taste and expression, Mr. Bolton gave an artistic rendering of Wallace's "In happy moments," and Mr. Theodore Distin sang Van Noorden's new song "A true loving home," for which he was much applauded. The violin solos of Mr. C. Lane were greatly admired. Mr. Van Noorden conducted in his usual efficient manner.

THE fifth anniversary of the North London Philharmonic Society was celebrated on Monday the 22nd May, when about thirty members and several gentlemen interested in the working of the Association took supper together. W. Ralph, Esq., very efficiently performed the duties of chairman; and amongst those assembled were J. F. Barnett, Esq., the President; J. D. Hill, Esq., F.R.C.S., and Dr. Barrett, Vice-Presidents; E. Silas, Esq., H. Chipp, Esq., and Mr. Heath Mills, the Society's Conductor. Upon the removal of the cloth the usual loyal toasts and those in connection with the Society were heartily responded to: the remainder of the evening was spent in listening to an excellent selection of music, contributed by Mr. Barnett, Mr. Chipp, Mr. Silas, Mr. Fletcher (who performed a solo on the French horn), and Messrs. Platt, Tremere and Hepburn. An Impromptu, played by the President, gave immense satisfaction to the members; and Mr. Chipp's performance of "Adelaida" on the violoncello was highly successful. The whole of the arrangements were thoroughly satisfactory; and a vote of thanks to the chairman brought a very pleasant evening to a close.

The first public concert of the College of Musicians took place on Thursday evening the 8th ult., at Albion Hall, London-wall. The programme was of a very ambitious description, but was nevertheless well carried out. Miss M. Carter was successful in Mozart's "Voi che sapete," and in Neithardt's "Echo Chorus," in which she took the solo part, she obtained a well-deserved encore. Miss Sophie Stuart also received an encore for Rossi's Cavatina, "Ah rendimi." Mr. and Madame Suchet Champion contributed several pieces, all of which were well sung; and Mr. Alfred Carder played with much brilliancy Beethoven's Sonata in E flat. Mr. Goodwin displayed great skill in two solos upon the violoncello; and the College choir, conducted by Mr. W. C. Filby, sang several madrigals and choruses, all of which were highly successful.

The third of the series of concerts, in aid of the organ fund of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, New Road, Shepherd's Bush, was given in the Lecture Hall, Leysfield Road, on Thursday the 8th ult. The programme was entirely composed of Scotch music, all of which was excellently rendered, several pieces being enthusiastically encored. Mr. W. Wilkinson, R.A.M., was an able accompanist. The sum of £16 14s. 6d. has been handed over to the Committee.

A concert was given on Tuesday evening the 13th ult., at the Pimlico Rooms, by the S. Barnabas Church choir, assisted by ladies of the congregation, under the able directorship of the organist, Mr. G. Prior, Mus. Bac., Oxon. The programme was highly attractive. The first part consisted of Haydn's "Spring," the solos in which by Miss Hardy, Messrs. Prior and Hardy, were much appreciated, and the choruses went well and steadily. The second part consisted of a miscellaneous selection, and included the overture to "William Tell," for two pianofortes and eight hands (which was well performed), Mendelssohn's "Vintage Song" (excellently given by the choir), and two solos, sung with much effect by Mr. Elwin. The room was very full.

Miss Ellen Glanville and Miss Florence Ashton gave an evening concert at Victoria Hall, Bayswater, on the 14th ult., assisted by Madame Osborne Williams, Signor Danielli, Mr. C. Stanton, and Mr. T. Burleigh; Pianoforte, Miss Kate Roberts and Signor Tito Mattei; Conductors, Signor Campana, Mr. Osborne Williams and Mr. Wilkinson, R.A.M. The hall was crowded with a fashionable audience, and the performance was highly successful.

A concert was given in the Assembly Rooms of the Railway Hotel, Edgware Road, Kilburn, on the 31st of May, by the choir of Christ Church, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, assisted by several friends. The programme consisted of sacred and secular music, amongst which in the first part was "The Œcumenical March," composed by J. Parry Cole, arranged as a duet for the pianoforte, and played by himself and Master Marrian; also the anthem "In Jewry is God known" (Dr. Whitfeld), "As panta the hart" (Spohr), selections from the oratorios of "Elijah and the "Messiah." The second part included a pianoforte solo "Concert Stück" (Weber by Miss G. Williams, accompanied on the harmonium by Mr. J. Parry Cole; "Silent Night" (Barnby); "The Village Choristers" (Moscheles), &c. Great praise is due to the conductor, Mr. J. Parry Cole (organist of the above church) for the excellent manner in which he has trained the members of the choir. The solos and principal parts were sustained by Masters Machin, Thompson, Wells and Maitland (Soprano); Messrs. J. Harris and C. Stansfield (Alto); Messrs. White and Cross (Tenor); Messrs. Marrian, Morant and Stansfield (Bass).

Mr. Charles Gardner gave a concert at Willis's Rooms on the 17th ult., assisted in the instrumental department by M. Buzian (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello), the vocalists being Misses Katharine Poyntz, Dalmaine, Alice Fairman and Bessie Randal. Mr. Gardner's pianoforte performance, especially in his own Sonata in A, was thoroughly appreciated and much applauded. The conductors were Mr. W. H. Monk and Mr. C. E. Stephens.

We are glad to find, from the account of the distribution of prizes at Owen's College, Manchester, given in the "Manchester Guardian," that an evening class has been formed in the College, for instruction in "Harmony," under the direction of Mr. F. Bridge, Mus. Bac., Organist of the Cathedral, and that the results have proved highly satisfactory. It is to be hoped that other educational bodies will follow this good example, and make "Harmony" a recognized branch of study.

Miss E. Langley gave her first concert on the 20th ult., at Kennington Assembly Rooms. In spite of obvious nervousness, Miss Langley, both in Barnett's Ballad "The Parted," and Ascher's pianoforte solo "Alice," created a favourable impression. The concert-giver was assisted by Mr. Lansdowne Cottell's Concert Company—the Misses Dwight, Lyndhurst, Christine, Perkes and A. Phillips (daughter of Mr. Henry Phillips) and also by Messrs. Bennett, Walter Reeves and S. Corne, all of whom gave much satisfaction to the audience. Messrs. Lansdowne Cottell and C. F. Weber conducted.

The forthcoming Gloucester Musical Festival is likely to prove exceedingly interesting, for two new Cantatas are promised—"St. John the Baptist," by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, and "Gideon," by Mr. W. G. Cusins—in addition to Bach's "Passion music" (St. Matthew) and Spohr's "Calvary," both of which will be comparative novelties. The vocalists already engaged are Madlle. Titiens, Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Madame Patey, Messrs. Vernon Rigby, Lloyd and Lewis Thomas, and Signor Foli. Dr. S. S. Wesley, the organist of the Cathedral, will, as usual, conduct the performances.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. Benjamin Hime, which took place at Manchester on the 19th May last. Mr. Hime was well known for many years as a music-publisher in that city, and also as a composer of many vocal works, all of which evinced much feeling for melody. At the time of his decease Mr. Hime was in his seventy-sixth year.

A concert by a Prince is by no means an every day occurrence; and it would therefore be difficult to say whether the large and fashionable audience assembled by Prince Poniatowski at St. James's Hall on the 14th ult., was solely attracted by the prospects held out in the programme. A new Mass, with a pianoforte and harmonium for accompaniments, followed by a selection of detached pieces, principally from the Prince's numerous operas, but all of his own composition, can scarcely be considered abstractedly an inviting bill of fare in the heart of a brilliant musical season; but such exceptional entertainments are, we presume, not to be judged by the ordinary rules; and we therefore congratulate the concert-giver upon achieving a result which many an established professor, with infinitely superior artistic attractions, could scarcely hope for. Let us not be thought however unduly to depreciate the compositions performed. There is much good writing in the Mass. The "Kyrie" is to our mind unquestionably the most devotional movement, although there are some clever choral effects in the "Cum Sancto Spiritu," and also in many portions where the chorus is combined with the solo voices. The final "Amen" is skilfully worked out; but the subject has no religious character; and especially at the conclusion, the choral part, with the ascending scale passages, on tonic and dominant harmony, is trite and uninteresting. Many of the solos are extremely melodious, the most effective being the "Gratias agimus," for the tenor, and the "Agnus Dei" for the baritone; although, for any distinctive character they possess, both might have been sung to other words in the second part, amongst the composer's operatic pieces. The exquisite singing of Madame Adelina Patti gave an interest to the "Christe eleison" which the merit of the music would scarcely have called forth; and the same vocalist also infused an extraordinary vitality into the somewhat common soprano solo in the "Credo." Mention must be made of the tenor and baritone duet "O Salutaris," which is excellently written for both voices, a striking figure in the accompaniment running through the movement in the minor, and the harp breaking in with much effect in the change to the tonic major. The solo parts were finely sung by Madame Adelina Patti, Madame Cora de Wilhorst (who is deservedly progressing in public favour), Madlle. Sanz, Signor Gardoni and Mr. Santley. Signor Vizetti presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. Sidney Naylor at the harmonium, the harp obbligato being well played by Mr. A. Lockwood. In the selection which followed the Mass, Madame Patti received an encore for a graceful ballad, "Farewell;" Madame Cora de Wilhorst created a genuine effect in a Cavatina from the opera, "Pierre de Medecis;" a cleverly written trio from another opera, "Don Desiderio," was excellently sung (Signor Ciampi lending his valuable aid); and Mr. Santley gave the "Yeoman's wedding song" with so much dramatic feeling as to cause an enthusiastic demand for its repetition. Prince Poniatowski accompanied the whole of the music in the second part on the pianoforte, and also conducted his Mass.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS'S evening concert at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 2nd ult., attracted a large and fashionable audience. The programme, as usual, contained a very excellent selection of Welsh music, the choruses being ably sustained by the Welsh Choral Union. Mr. Richards's own compositions—the "Boat song," a Madrigal "Ye little birds," the sacred song, with chorus, "In the hour," and the "Cambrian war song" (the first sung by Miss Edith Wynne, and the second by Mr. Lewis Thomas), were received with rapturous applause, both the songs being enthusiastically encored. The pianoforte solos by the concert-giver were, of course, an important feature, Beethoven's "Sonata pathétique," and three of his own works—a Welsh Fantasia, the graceful little piece "In Memoriam" and a Tarantella in E flat (encored), sufficiently attesting his power of interpreting music of varied styles. Mr. Richards also performed Sir Sterndale Bennett's Sonata Duo, for pianoforte and violoncello (in which he was joined by M. Paque), which was listened to with much interest and warmly applauded. A very successful début was made by Miss Llewellyn Bagnall, a young student of the Royal Academy of Music, who in a song by Pinsuti proved not only that she had a pure and sympathetic voice, but that her natural qualifications had been carefully and judiciously trained. She created a highly favourable impression with the audience, and was unanimously recalled. Miss Watts (who was thoroughly successful in Mr. Richards's sacred song, "As o'er the past"), Madlle. Angèle, Miss Annie Edmonds and Mr. Vernon Rigby were the other vocalists; and Mr. John Thomas, in addition to conducting the Welsh Choral Union, performed a harp solo with his accustomed effect. The vocal solos were most artistically accompanied by Mr. Henry Eyers.

THE concert of Mr. John Thomas, the eminent harpist, given at the residence of the Marquis of Downshire, on the 15th ult., was very fully attended. Mr. Thomas's performances were warmly and deservedly applauded, his refined style and facile execution being thoroughly appreciated in Alvars's grand "Fantasia," in a duet for harp and pianoforte, with Sir Julius Benedict, and in some light pieces of his own composition and arrangement. Solos were also given with much success by M. Van Waefelghen (viola) and Mr. W. G. Cusins (pianoforte). The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne (who was deservedly encored in a song by the concert-giver, "An exile sighed alone," the harp accompaniment played by the composer), the Sisters Doria, Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Watts, Mrs. Weldon, Miss Rebecca Jewell, Miss Angèle, Mr. A. Byron and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The accompanists were Sir Julius Benedict, M. Gounod and Mr. W. H. Thomas.

FAVOURABLE mention must be made of Miss Alice Ryall, who gave her first morning concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 10th ult., and displayed an excellent soprano voice and cultivated style in songs by Spohr, Mozart and Macfarren, in all of which she was warmly and deservedly applauded. The other vocalists were Miss Rebecca Jewell, Madlle. Drasdil and Mr. Edward Lloyd; and the solo instrumentalists Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. J. Hallett Sheppard (pianoforte), Mr. Lazarus (clarionet), Mr. Pettit (violoncello) and Mr. Oscar Edwards (harmonium). Conductors, Mr. Walter Macfarren and Mr. Stephen Kemp.

MR. WALTER MACFARREN'S second concert, on the 20th May, included Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Sonata Duo in A (op. 32) for pianoforte and violoncello, Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (op. 30), for pianoforte and violin, and Schumann's Quartet in E flat (op. 47) for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello, in all of which the artistic playing of the pianoforte part by the concert-giver was a conspicuous feature, and Herr Straus (violin), Mr. Burnett (viola) and Herr Daubert (violoncello), proved themselves most worthy coadjutors. From his own compositions Mr. Macfarren selected for performance his spirited and well written pianoforte duet "L'Appassionata" (in which he was ably joined by Mr. Stephen Kemp), a Nocturne, "Music on the Lake," a Romance, "Madeline," and his "First Polonaise," the last three pieces pleasing so much that he was recalled to the platform, by the unanimously expressed wish of the audience. Miss Marion Severn was highly successful in Henry Smart's dramatic song "The petrel's warning"; and in two sacred songs by Mr. Walter Macfarren—"O Lord, rebuke me not," and "O sing unto the Lord a new song"—Miss Rebecca Jewell achieved so marked a success that she was compelled to re-appear to acknowledge the prolonged applause, a compliment which was also awarded for her very refined rendering of "Rose softly blooming." At the third and last concert, on the 3rd ult., Mr. Walter Macfarren's Sonata in F major, for pianoforte and violin, was given with excellent effect by the composer and M. Sainton; and the programme also comprised Mozart's Quartet in G minor, for pianoforte, violin, viola and violoncello, and Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, the executants in these pieces being, besides the artists already mentioned, Mr. Burnett (viola) and Signor Pezze (violoncello). Mendelssohn's Duet "Allegro brillante" (op. 92) was well played by the concert-giver and his talented pupil, Miss Linda Scates, the effect being materially heightened by its performance on two pianofortes. In his own pieces, "Spinning song," "Golden slumbers" and the "Mountain stream," Mr. Macfarren elicited the warmest applause; and he was recalled most enthusiastically both at the conclusion of these compositions and of his Sonata. Miss Edith Wynne won two encores, one for a very graceful song by Miss Josephine Williams, called "The wild rose-bud," and the other for Mr. Walter Macfarren's "Welcome

Song to Spring.

Spring," a composition which has all the elements of popularity. A good word must also be said for Miss Alice Ryall, who was highly successful in her rendering of Spohr's Barcarolle, "By the silver beams of Luna." The vocal music was accompanied with much refined musical feeling by Mr. Stephen Kemp.

Mr. W. Crowther Alwyn, of the Royal Academy of Music, gave a concert at St. James's Hall, on the 31st May, when he produced his new Mass, with full band and chorus, the principal parts being sustained by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Rebecca Jewell, Mr. Frederick Walker and Mr. Lewis Thomas. It is always difficult for a young composer like Mr. Alwyn to estimate the success of an early work at precisely its just value; but if he have sufficient power to accept the audible marks of demonstration and the more subdued expressions of kindly sympathy which the performance of his Mass called forth as an incentive to earnest and renewed exertion, he may safely calculate on a brilliant future. There is so much bold and masterly thought throughout this work that it can scarcely be criticised as the composition of a student: the choral parts are clearly and solidly written; and even where crudities occur we can find but little fault which experience will not correct. The "Gloria" is excellent, and contains contrast which would do honour to composers who have already won a name in sacred music; and although perhaps redundantly scored in some parts, we could point to many of the choruses, especially that in the "Hosanna in excelsis," which are not only highly effective, but evince a knowledge of contrapuntal treatment creditable alike to the talent of Mr. Alwyn and the training of the institution in which he has been educated. As a specimen of a pure, religious and truly sympathetic setting of the words, we may instance the "Benedictus," a quartet for soli voices, exquisitely melodious, and harmonised with care and judgment, the "Hosanna" (to which we have already alluded) concluding the movement with much effect. Space will not allow us to enter more into detail on the many merits of this composition; but we may conclude by saying that Mr. Alwyn has a right to congratulate himself upon the result of his first public appeal; and, if he only remain true to himself and the art, he may securely calculate on the continued support and encouragement of those whose judgment has any solid value. During the progress of the Mass the applause was most enthusiastic, and at its conclusion the composer was called for and warmly greeted on his success. Mr. Alwyn afterwards played a MS. Capriccio of his own composition on the pianoforte with much effect, and several vocal pieces were successfully given. There was an excellent orchestra, conducted by Mr. A. Manns.

The anniversary meeting of the Charity Children of the Metropolitan Schools was held under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday the 8th ult. The service was most impressively rendered throughout, the fresh voices of the children being heard to much advantage in the "Old Hundredth," in a portion of Handel's Anthem, "Zadock the Priest," and more especially in the Hallelujah Chorus, which produced a thrilling effect upon the listeners. The "Te Deum" and "Jubilate" (Goss in A major) were sung in a manner worthy of the music; and the Responses by Tallis, and Psalms of the day (given to Dr. Crotch's well known chant in C) were equally worthy of commendation. Mendelssohn's chorale "Sleepers wake" was also an interesting feature, the trumpet parts being magnificently played by Messrs. Harper, De Lacy, &c. Mr. Goss presided with his accustomed ability at the organ, assisted by Mr. George Cooper. Prayers were intoned by the Rev. W. J. Hall, M.A., and the Lessons were read by the Rev. W. S. Simpson, M.A.

Mr. Frederick Penna and Miss Kate Penna gave a concert at the Beethoven Rooms on the 31st May before a numerous audience. Miss Penna is already known as a vocalist of much talent; and on this occasion she fully supported her reputation by her excellent singing of "Di piacer," and Bishop's "Tell me my heart." She also took part with Signor Caravoglia in Rossini's duet, "Dunque io son," and in several pieces of concerted music. Mr. Penna sang with much effect "It is enough" (from "Elijah") and Verdi's "Infelice," in both of which he was much applauded. Miss Penna also proved herself a graceful composer in a Serenade, "Look from thy lattice," which was well given by Mr. Trelawny Cobham. Besides the artists already mentioned the concert-givers were assisted by Madame Penna and Signor Tito Mattei (pianoforte), Herr Pollitzer and Mr. N. Mori (violin), Herr Goffrie (viola), Herr Lidel (violoncello), and Madame Calderon and Mrs. Osborne Williams, vocalists.

At the annual concert of Mr. Walter Bache a programme of conventional pieces is so little expected that no surprise is created when the selection does not include a single composition either of Beethoven, Mozart, or any other of the honoured names of those who have advanced the art to its present high position. The performance of Friday evening the 26th May, given at the Hanover Square Rooms, was no exception to the rule. Liszt's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat, and the same composer's "Les Préludes" (Poème symphonique d'après Lamartine) were the works in which the orchestra was engaged; and although we can scarcely believe that Mr. Bache converted any of his audience to the worship of the eccentric German composer, there can be no doubt that the performance was highly satisfactory to those who are already his disciples, and exceedingly interesting to those who heard the preaching of his musical doctrines for the first time. Mr. Bache's playing was thoroughly earnest and intellectual; and the applause with which he was received was most legitimately earned. Miss Clara Doria and Mr. Nordblom were the vocalists; and the conductors were Mr. Dannreuther and Mr. Walter Bache.

Mrs. John Macfarren gave a concert at St. George's Hall on the afternoon of the 25th May, before a large and highly appreciative audience. Amongst the pianoforte solos given by the concert-giver were two Sketches of Sir Sterndale Bennett, "The Lake" and "The Fountain," Chopin's "Fantaisie-Impromptu," and Walter Macfarren's "Third Tarantella," and she was also heard to the utmost advantage in Beethoven's Trio in B flat (Op. 11) for pianoforte, clarionet and violoncello, in which she was ably assisted by Mr. Lazarus and Herr Daubert. The vocalists were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Banks, Miss Julia Elton, Miss Marion Severn, Miss Jessie Royd, Signor Gardoni, Herr Reichardt and M. Jules Lefort. The accompanists were Herr W. Ganz, Mr. Walter Macfarren and Signor Randegger.

The fourth concert of the Welsh Choral Union was given at the Concert Hall, Store Street, on the 29th May, before a large audience. The singing of the Welsh airs, harmonised by Mr. John Thomas, was so excellent that we can scarcely wonder at the enthusiasm with which they were received, nor indeed can it be doubted that if the choir progress as it has already done, a great future is before this Society. The preservation of national melodies is an object of the deepest interest; and with a leader so zealous and talented as Mr. John Thomas, the Welsh Choral Union may grow to an importance which perhaps was scarcely contemplated when the present unpretending series of concerts was commenced. To this end, however, a definite plan must be adhered to: there are plenty of choirs to sing Mendelssohn's "O hills, O vales of pleasure," but a body of vocalists specially trained to interpret Welsh music, and under the guidance of a Welshman, has a mission apart from this; and, if properly managed, may create a taste for the native melodies of Wales which cannot but be beneficial to the progress of art. The improvement in the choir during the short time it has been before the public is worthy of the highest commendation; the tone—especially of the female voices—is extremely good; and with a little more watchful attention to the conductor's beat, a slight indecision, especially observable in starting after the pauses, will be at once corrected. It may be imagined that the audience was thoroughly delighted with the programme when we say that out of eighteen pieces, ten were encored. This mark of favour was accorded to the chorus, "A Boat song," a sacred song with chorus, "In the hour" (beautifully rendered by Miss Edith Wynne), a madrigal, "Ye little birds," and the "Cambrian War song" (spiritedly sung by Mr. Lewis Thomas)—all the composition of Mr. Brinley Richards, who has on every occasion proved himself an energetic upholder of the music of the Principality, and without whom no concert in aid of the cause would be complete. Encores were also awarded to Mr. John Thomas for his highly artistic performance of a grand Harp Study by Parish Alvars; to Miss Kate Roberts for her brilliant rendering of Benedict's Pianoforte piece, "Where the bee sucks," and to Miss Rebecca Jewell, Mr. Arthur Byron and Mr. Lewis Thomas for several solos, all of which were admirably sung. The choruses were conducted with much care and judgment by Mr. John Thomas; and Mrs. Henry Davies and Miss Waugh were able accompanists at the pianoforte.

Miss Josephine Lawrence gave a Matinée Musicale at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 30th May, when a programme well calculated to display the versatile talent of this clever pianist was provided. Besides joining Madame Arabella Goddard in Mendelssohn and Moscheles' duet for two pianofortes, on the Gipsy's March in "Preciosa," Miss Lawrence performed the pianoforte part in Haydn's Trio in G major, No 1, and the "Kreutzer Sonata" (with Herr Straus), evincing in every piece musical feeling and executive accuracy rarely to be found in one so young. She also played a Fugue by Handel, one of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne worte" and a Harpsichord lesson by Scarlatti, all of which were received with enthusiastic and well deserved applause, the latter being unanimously encored. The concert-giver was assisted by Herr Straus (violin) and Signor Pezze (violoncello); and the vocalists were Miss Galloway, Miss Alice Fairman, Madlle. Drasdil, Mr. Montem Smith and Mr. Robert Hilton. Signor Randegger was a most able accompanist.

Mr. E. H. Thorne gave a morning concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 26th May, which was fully and fashionably attended. A very refined rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 7) and a brilliant performance of Thalberg's variations on "God save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia" amply asserted the concert-giver's claim to the highest rank as an intellectual and executive artist, and the applause with which he was greeted was spontaneous and well deserved. The other solo instrumentalists were Herr Louis Ries (violin) and M. Paque (violoncello). The singing of Miss Ida Thorne was a marked feature in the programme; and we have little doubt that her cordial reception with the audience will lead to a desire for her more frequent appearance in our London concert-rooms. The other vocalists were Miss Sydney, Miss Enriquez (who was encored in Sullivan's "Looking back"), Madlle. Carola and M. Jules Lefort. The concert was in every respect thoroughly successful.

On Thursday evening, the 22nd ult., the West London Amateur Orchestral and Choral Society gave a concert at the Hanover Square Rooms. The programme comprised Mendelssohn's "Lobgesang," with Miss Laura Whitton, Miss Muir, and Mr. Stanton as soloists, who sang most artistically. The Pianoforte Concerto, in G minor, by the same composer, was well played by Miss Miles (amateur); and Handel's "Let the bright Seraphim," carefully rendered by Miss Maudsley (with Mr. Dearden's excellent trumpet obbligato), was encored, but not repeated. Selections from Bellini's "La Sonnambula," with Miss E. Muir, Miss Neale, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Armstrong as principal vocalists, brought this most successful concert to a close. Great commendation must be extended to the band and chorus, and also to Mr. W. Beavan, who conducted with his usual ability. The room was quite filled by a fashionable and appreciative audience.

Mr. Frederic Archer gave a Matinée Musicale on the 29th May at St. George's Hall, assisted by Madlle. Claus (violin), M. Albert (violoncello) and a number of talented vocalists, including Madlle. Liebhart, Mrs. Archer, Miss Janet Haydon, Mr George Perren, Mr. Harley Vinning, &c. The principal feature of the programme was the pianoforte playing of the concert-giver, the excellence of which was proved by his performance of a number of classical pieces, and some lighter compositions by Chopin, Stephen Heller, Ferdinand Hiller and others, in all of which he was received with warm and deserved applause. The conductors were Professor Mulder and Mr C. J. Hargitt.

Oberon. An Opera, in Three Acts. Written by J. R. Planché. The music composed by Carl Maria Von Weber. Edited by Natalia Macfarren.

This carefully edited edition will be welcomed with pleasure by the admirers of Weber's melodious and fascinating opera, the many beauties of which, since its production on the Italian stage in England, have become almost universally known and appreciated. In an "Editor's note" we are told that the dramatic portions of the work are here made to agree with the version prepared for the Italian Opera by Mr. Planché, and it may also be mentioned that the interpolated pieces, from Weber's Opera "Euryanthe" (which were then introduced for the first time), are mentioned in footnotes as they occur. The aria "From boyhood trained" (based on the beautiful subject in the overture), now assigned to Oberon, was originally composed for the situation of "Oh, 'tis a glorious sight," and for the character of Huon, the latter having been written to satisfy Mr. Braham. The words of Mr. Planché are not only excellently fitted to the music, but so intrinsically good, that we almost regret to see them translated into feeble Italian. Fashion, however, ordains that by this method alone can operas gain admission into our great lyrical establishments; and all who desire to hear the works as the composers wrote them, therefore, must wait—and hope. Meantime, here we are presented with the most perfect edition of the opera with the English words, and an Italian translation sanctioned by the author.

Endymion. A Pastoral. The poem by Vincent Amcotts. The music by Edwin Aspa.

If the composer of this Pastoral has not attempted to advance to a high school of art, he has at least succeeded in producing a composition remarkable for tunefulness, refinement, and true musicianlike feeling. The Prelude, commencing with the conventional key-note pedal, well indicates the pastoral character of the work. The Allegro, in C major, is simple in the extreme, and introduces two pleasing subjects, both of which occur in the vocal part—the first in the Baritone air, No. 3, and the second in the Recit. and Chorus, No. 8. The opening chorus, including solos for Soprano, Mezzo-Soprano, and Tenor, is exceedingly effective, and contains just sufficient change of key to prevent monotony. Passing the Baritone air already alluded to, and a characteristic Hunting Chorus, we come to a well written Recitative and Air for Tenor, which has a placid and appropriate melody, with which the chorus is effectively combined. The Duet for Tenor and Baritone, which follows, has some good points, but appears to us hardly as spontaneous as the rest of the music. The flowing melody in $\frac{12}{8}$ rhythm, for Mezzo-soprano, leading to a Recitative and Chorus, is graceful and elegantly accompanied; and the entry of the chorus, in triple rhythm, at the conclusion is an excellent point. The Recitative and Chorus for Soprano, which succeeds this, is based upon the melodious second subject in the instrumental Prelude; and in the Musette, for Contralto, which ends the first part, there is more character and originality than in any other number in the work. The second part commences with an Instrumental Introduction, "On the Mountain," intended to represent dance music at a distance, and after a short Recitative, the chorus, first heard afar off, and then gradually approaching, concludes the piece with much picturesque effect. A Baritone air, at the end of which a distant chorus is again heard, and an "Invocation," for the Tenor (which contains much clever writing, but scarcely sufficient dramatic colouring for the subject), leads to a pleasing chorus, "He sleeps, and the roses are sleeping beside him," the theme of which is excellently wedded to the words, although not strikingly original. A Scena, for the Soprano, is effectively written, and contains many good points in the accompaniment; but the vocal part, embracing two octaves, will somewhat tax the powers of an ordinary singer. The Duet for Soprano and Tenor, leading to the final chorus, is well written for the voices, and appropriately concludes a composition which, as we have already indicated, is not only sufficiently melodious to please a general audience, but so obviously the work of a musician that it will be accepted with favour by the more exacting critics. A good word must also be said for the libretto, which is well laid out for musical requirements throughout, and written with the fluency and graceful ease of an accomplished poet.

Festal March. Performed at the Marriage of H.R.H. The Princess Louise with the Marquis of Lorne. Composed by Sir George Elvey, Mus. D., Oxon.

THIS is a spirited and effective March; and, without offering any marked features of originality, is sufficiently interesting to take rank amongst the many drawing-room compositions of this character constantly issued by the music-shops. Its title suggests that it is not to be considered as a military work; and although "Wedding Marches" are dangerous subjects for composers after Mendelssohn to handle, we think that Sir George Elvey has been fairly successful in acquitting himself of a task which, considering his position as organist of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, was, we presume, not a self-imposed one.

Six Morceaux pour Violon et Pianoforte, par Charles James Toms.

ALTHOUGH, as will be seen by the title, there are six of these pieces, the second Book (containing Nos. 4, 5, and 6), only has been forwarded to us. They are all graceful, and evidently written by an artist who understands the capabilities of both instruments. No. 4, in A major, is based on a melodious subject, in $\frac{3}{8}$ rhythm, the pianoforte sustaining an important part throughout. Where the change into the tonic minor takes place, the detached chords in the accompaniment have a good effect against the flowing theme of the violin. No. 5, a Romance, in E major, opens with a placid melody, the sudden transition into C major, with a marked theme and bold pianoforte accompaniment, forming a good contrast with the quiet commencement. No. 6 is a spirited Tarantella, in E minor, which it should be remarked does not follow the plan adopted in nearly all the modern Tarantellas, of modulating into the tonic major. Mr. Toms is, we think, fairly entitled to commendation for getting most of his effects in a legitimate way; the manner in which the instruments are woven in together being throughout highly creditable. Although simple in construction, these compositions evince much musical feeling; and amateurs will find them acceptable little pieces for performance in the drawing-room.

Conte D'Enfant. Berceuse, pour le Piano.
Puck. Galop Brillant, pour le Piano.
Composées par Adolphe Schloesser.

THE first of these pieces is a tranquil Andante, in G flat major, excellently descriptive of its title. It is so much the fashion to call such little sketches as these "Studies" that we almost wonder Herr Schloesser has not fallen in with the custom, especially seeing that no better exercise for legato playing with both hands could possibly be written. The magic "De Salon," however, should be added if this composition were ever published as an "Etude," for it will be quite as attractive in performance as useful in practice. The Galop is full of animation, and would make an excellent piece for public players with rapid fingers. The first theme is extremely spirited, and there is variety enough throughout to keep the attention alive. The legato subject in the Subdominant, after the double bar, forms a good contrast with the other portions of the piece, and the coda, with its brilliant octave passages, concludes the composition with much effect. We can scarcely doubt that this capital Galop will speedily make its way to popularity.

The Voices of the Bells. Song.
The Maiden and the Bird. Ballad.
Words from the German, by the Rev. J. G. Bailey, M.A. The music by Elaine.

THE simplicity of these songs almost disarms criticism; and indeed, although they do not startle by any novelty either in subject or treatment, they at least do not offend by grammatical inaccuracy. In the "Voices of the Bells" the semiquaver accompaniment at the commencement, which so often re-appears, becomes somewhat monotonous, but the subject which follows, in the Dominant, is graceful and melodious. The title of the second song suggests unfortunate recollections of a certain "Bird and the Maiden" by Spohr, and as Elaine's unpretending composition has no right to suffer by such a comparison, it would have been better to have called her ballad by another name. The theme is flowing and vocal, and there is no more "twittering" than we have been taught to expect in bird-songs.

The Rose and the Ring. A Romance. Words by J. F. Waller, L.L.D. Music by Charles Oberthür.

THERE is much dramatic feeling in this Romance, and a very evident desire is apparent to express the words with appropriate music throughout; but the changes of key are somewhat violent, and the effect of the song, as a continuous composition, is scarcely satisfactory. A transition from E major to C major, for instance, may be excellent where any corresponding variety of feeling takes place in the poetry; but why the words, "And he loved a maiden bright," should close in E, and the line, "Her hair was like the burnish'd gold," should commence in C, we are at a loss to understand. The change to $\frac{12}{8}$ rhythm is an effective point, and here the melody flows on smoothly enough. It may also be said that the harmonies are carefully written, and the accompaniments well considered. We like the pathetic conclusion, especially the enharmonic modulation on the chord of A flat minor.

CHAPPELL AND CO.

Bourrée, from the Second Sonata for the Violin, by J. S. Bach.
Sarabande, from the Sixth Sonata for the Violoncello, by J. S. Bach.
Gavotte, from the Sixth Sonata for the Violin, by J. S. Bach.
Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Berthold Tours.

AGAIN we have to thank Mr. Tours for doing his utmost towards spreading a knowledge of the works of Bach amongst amateurs. It is true that many music-lovers may have heard these compositions played by Herr Joachim and Signor Piatti at the Monday Popular Concerts; but in these excellent arrangements they have the power of re-producing them at the pianoforte, and consequently of discovering many beauties which before escaped them. The Bourrée, in B minor, is so light and elegant that it would unquestionably attract the majority of listeners, even in that uncongenial atmosphere for good music—the drawing-room; and if there were a few amongst the company who preferred the trifling compositions of the day, it must be remembered that it is better to lead your hearers up to you than to play down to them. The Sarabande is scarcely, perhaps, quite so attractive in the theme, but like all Bach's writings, is highly interesting to the student. The Gavotte will perhaps be the most popular of the three works, from the extreme melodiousness of the subject, and the excessive variety in the treatment. As exercises both for the mind and fingers, these Transcriptions are invaluable; and teachers may well introduce them as studies, with the full assurance that few intelligent pupils will practise them long before they will begin to delight in them as pieces.

LAMBORN COCK AND CO.

For Rosabelle. Song. Composed by Arthur O'Leary. We select this song, so full of legendary romantic character, from a pile of vocal works with no character at all, in the hope that baritone singers may be led by our favourable notice of it to investigate its merits for themselves. By the simplest means the words are coloured in such perfect sympathy with the feeling of the poet as to lift the composition above the merely graceful effusions of the day. A quiet melody in F major, with an appropriately placid accompaniment, opens the song in the cell of the monk, and contrasts well with the more animated theme, which tells of the deeds of the valiant knight; the return to the original subject, at the commencement of the second verse, being highly dramatic. After the close in F, the short symphony leading to the phrase in D flat has an exceedingly fresh effect; and the lengthening out of the concluding line is happily descriptive of the leading idea of the little poem. Mr. O'Leary should give us more songs of this class, for he has poetical feeling, and throws his heart into his work.

If to thy heart I were as near. Song. The poetry by Motherwell. The music by Frederick Westlake.

A flowing subject in $\frac{12}{8}$ rhythm, with much point in the accompaniment throughout, shows that the composer of this song has no desire to make his name by falling into the beaten track. The change of key introduces a melodious theme, at the end of the first phrase of which an effective instance of the ninth on the dominant occurs. At the return of the leading melody we get a change in the character of the accompaniment, which gives much vitality to the voice part; and an excellent point is made where, whilst the singer holds the dominant for two bars, the subject is introduced in the accompaniment with new harmonies, which (presuming that the engraver has put the natural against the C, instead of the A, in the second bar) are unexceptionable. This is really a good song, and we conscientiously recommend it to vocalists who have got beyond the inane ballads of which the utmost that can be said is that they are harmless.

Over the Crystal Waters. Barcarolle, for Two Voices. The words written by J. L. L. The music composed by Henry James Noble.

Amateurs will find this an attractive duet, as it has a flowing and agreeable melody, is well harmonised, and contains no vocal difficulties. The change from D major into F is somewhat violent, but when we are fairly in the key the subject sails on pleasantly enough, the effect being much aided by a graceful broken accompaniment of semiquavers, which would have been all the better executed by those young ladies who sing a great deal and play a little, if the composer had marked some of the leading fingers. The short solo for the first voice, afterwards joined by the second, and the lingering on the dominant harmony before the return to the original key, prove that Mr. Noble has well thought out the design of his composition; and, considering the patchy nature of many of the modern vocal pieces, this alone is a merit worth recording.

AUGENER AND CO.

The Hour of Rest. Song. The poetry by Eliza F. Morris. The music composed by Charles Henry Shepherd.

A tranquil subject in accordance with the feeling o the poetry is all that we generally find even in the better class of what may be called "domestic songs"; but we have here in addition appropriate and well written harmonies, and an accompaniment neither weak nor obtrusive. The theme is extremely melodious; but although dedicated to Mr. Sims Reeves, we presume, from the compass, that it is not intended for a tenor. At the close of the song the final line is happily lengthened out, a good effect being gained by the voice commencing on the half bar, for the last two words, after the chord of the dominant seventh has been played.

King of the Sea. Words anon. The music by Fred. C. Atkinson, Mus. Bac., Cantab.

A good bold song, which bass singers may make extremely effective. After a spirited symphony a well marked subject, in B flat major, expresses the words with remarkable fidelity; an energetic and unpretentious accompaniment enriching, without disturbing, the melody. There is a good point in the pianoforte part, to the phrase marked "con anima"; and the ascent of the voice an octave, to the words "I'm King of the Sea," gives much effect to the burden of the song. We do not like the $\frac{4}{4}$ in C minor, which follows the harmony of B flat, in the symphony, and we should have preferred the C sharp to have been written as a diminished 7th (D flat) in the chord which succeeds it; but these are of course matters of opinion.

BELL AND DALDY.

Aunt Judy's Song-Book for Children. By Alfred Scott Gatty.

This is a handsome little volume containing twenty-four songs, especially adapted to the minds and voices of young children. It should have been said on the title page that the music is by Mr. Gatty, as although he has written much of the poetry, some of the pieces are contributed by other authors. Many of the songs are extremely well suited for the purposes of musical illustration; such simple words, when allied with simple notes, lingering with irresistible power in the memory of juvenile vocalists. It is for this reason that we should be extremely careful what poetry we put before them; and, although we by no means insist that a moral lesson should be inculcated in every piece, we doubt whether, for instance, in the "Snow-man" it is good to teach children to ridicule "Uncle Ned's" gout, or to knock a hole in papa's new hat and then run and hide from the indignant mamma. We do not say that new hats are not spoiled by children, or that uncles have not the gout; but we question whether the making a good joke of these things should be part of the amusement recommended by their elders for a juvenile holiday in the garden. We have done however with preaching; and there is really much to commend in this collection of pieces. The words of "The Burial of the Linnet," "The Child's Good-night," "The Three Little Pigs," and "The Sparrow on the Tree," are excellent; and we can imagine the applause that would greet a rising nursery vocalist who, to show his intense desire to go to school, sings the following verse:—

> "There's Harry returned with a prize,
> And Jack with a bat and black eye;
> And I think that a boy of my size,
> If he cannot take honours, should try."

The music throughout is exactly what it should be—simple, tuneful, well harmonised, and with accompaniments thoroughly within the reach of small hands. From the number, we may select for especial commendation "Robin, Robin," "Past eight o'clock," (which has a sleepy character in perfect sympathy with the words) "Papa, I am weary of home," "Above the Spire," and

"Christmas Voices," the last of which has a chorus at the end of each verse—a never-failing attraction to children. The book is well got up, and is dedicated by the author to some favourite "Little Hilda."

ASHDOWN AND PARRY.

Caprice alla Gigue, for the Pianoforte. By John Abram, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

A slow introduction ushers in a spirited subject in C minor, which is so well treated as to induce us to recommend this little piece both for practice and performance. The theme in the tonic major, after the double bar, has much character; and there is some good writing on pages 5 and 6. There is nothing perhaps especially striking in Mr. Abram's Caprice, but it is composed on a healthy plan, and does not depend upon mere "prettiness" for success.

C. LONSDALE.

A Dream of Spring. Solo, for Pianoforte. Composed by J. L. Ellerton, Esq.

A graceful trifle by a composer who has already earned honours in a higher department of the art. The piece opens with a melodious subject, "Andante Religioso," and contains a "Dance of Peasants," a "Dance of Fairies," and a spirited "Finale," all of which are excellently written and highly effective. The Peasant's dance has a merry theme, in which both hands are well employed; and the light subject, in staccato chords, given to the Fairies is extremely characteristic. Amateurs who desire that their "drawing-room" pieces should be good as well as pleasing ought at once to possess themselves of Mr. Ellerton's "Dream of Spring."

METZLER AND CO.

The Convolvulus. Four-part song. Words by J. C Cox. Music by Charles J. Frost.

Mr. Frost has written an extremely melodious part-song, easy of execution without being tame, and expressive without being affected. To us it appears that the changes of key, commencing six bars before the double bar, are scarcely satisfactory, especially the close in C, which, after passing through F, sounds somewhat abrupt; but few persons might feel this as we do, and we mention our impression in a friendly spirit to the composer, as we would were we to converse with him on the subject. There can be little doubt that the song, if well sung, will prove highly effective with a general audience.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Referring to the letter signed P. J., which appeared in your last issue, enquiring as to the methods pursued in obtaining the degrees of "Mus. Bac." and "Mus. Doc.," I beg to enclose an advertisement clipped from the Daily Telegraph of yesterday's date, which may possibly throw some light on the subject.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
Ryding Hill, June 15, 1871. A. W. C.

WANTED, a DEGREE, for either Mus. D. or Mus. Bac. (Foreign).—State lowest terms, with name of university, to . . .

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—I should be glad to know, through your paper, the best way to get information respecting the degrees of Bac. and Doc. of Music.

The way I and others have done is to write to the Professor of the University. 'Tis true a very courteous reply followed, but it must be a very long letter that can give every information as regards the subjects, standard, etc., required for the degree. Why is it that no prospectuses are sent you on application giving full details?

If you would kindly allow this to appear in your paper, perhaps some gentleman with the degree might enlighten myself as well as others in the same fix.

Yours truly,
June 7, 1871. AMATEUR.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

C. Hislop.—We believe that Mr. Hullah does not now conduct any public singing classes.

D. Thomas.—The line through the small note denotes that it is not an appoggiatura but an acciacatura, which instead of being at all dwelt upon, is rapidly passed over, the whole weight being given to the principal note. The second example is we think, incorrectly written. Such a sign usually means that the note to which it applies is to be divided into quavers, two lines expressing semiquavers &c.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Adelaide, Australia.—On Thursday evening, the 2nd March, during the interval of the rehearsal of the Philharmonic Society, an address was presented to Mr. E. Spiller, the conductor, with a baton of beautiful and elaborate workmanship. The handle is formed of black ebony, and ornamented with fern leaves wrought in colonial gold. The shaft or blade is of polished sterling silver, elegantly chased, and bearing the following inscription:—"Presented to Mr. E. Spiller by the members of the Adelaide Philharmonic Society, February, 1871." It has been manufactured by Mr. H. Steiner, of Rundle Street. Mr. Leader, in presenting the testimonial, paid a well deserved tribute to the successful exertions of Mr. Spiller in connection with the Society, and mentioned, as an instance, that "he had written with his own hand 700 pages of music." Mr. Spiller made a suitable reply, and concluded by expressing a hope that the Society might maintain its present position, and continue to flourish for many years to come.

Ashford, Kent.—The Choir Benevolent Fund Festival at Ashford, on the 1st ult., was the first in connection with this institution held in a parish church, and one of the most successful in a monetary sense, upwards of £74 being the profits realized. The choir consisted of forty voices, selected from the Chapel Royal, St. George's (Windsor), Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's, Canterbury Cathedral, and Eton College. Mr. Legge, organist of St. Mary's Church, was accompanist, and performed his duties admirably, Mr. Shoubridge acting as conductor. The features of the meeting were a morning service at St. Mary's Church, a public luncheon, and an evening concert in the Corn Exchange. At the morning service, the Confession, Preces, &c., were sung to Tallis's music, and the "Te Deum" and "Jubilate," to Cooke, in G. The anthems were—"God is our hope" (Greene), "My God, my God" (Mendelssohn), "O give thanks" (Purcell), "Hear my prayer" (Mendelssohn), (solo, G. Martin Coward), and "Praise the Lord, O my soul" (Goss). The introductory voluntary was extempore, by Mr. Legge, and that at the conclusion, "Deus Tibi" (Mozart). The performance at the service was worthy of all praise, and the new organ was finely played by Mr. Legge. The programme of the concert included some of the most admired productions of English masters, all of which were thoroughly appreciated by the audience. Dr. Wilks and Mr. Legge rendered efficient service as accompanists. There was a very large and aristocratic attendance at both the service and the concert.

Bedford.—The second concert of the fifth season was held on the 6th ult. at the Bedford Rooms, before a large audience. The first part of the programme was devoted to Mendelssohn's First Walpurgis Night, which was given with much effect throughout, the choruses, especially "Disperse, ye gallant mea," being sung with commendable precision. The principal feature in the second part was the performance of Beethoven's Trio, in E flat, for pianoforte (Mr. P. H. Diemer), violin (Mr. Folkes), and violoncello (Mr. Gough), every movement of which was so well rendered as to elicit enthusiastic applause. Several vocal pieces were successfully given; and the concert was brought to a close with the March and Chorus from the Ruins of Athens.

BRADFORD.—The choirs of the various churches in Bradford recently held their united festival in the Parish Church. About 1400 tickets had been issued to the public, and although the church was apparently quite full at seven o'clock, numbers continued to enter for half an hour longer, until every seat that could be provided and all the standing room available were occupied. The choristers entered the church by the grand porch, and marched up the centre aisle singing the processional hymn, "Brief life is here our portion." The procession was closed by a number of the local clergy. The prayers were beautifully intoned by the Rev. W. Dyson, curate of the Parish Church, and the responses were effectively given. The Psalms for the day (Ps. xliii., xliv.,) were sung to chants by Harcourt and Harris, and the "Cantate Domino" and "Deus Misereatur" to compositions of considerable merit by Mr. Swaine, the organist. Mendelssohn's anthem, "Judge me, O God," was given at the conclusion of the prayers with fine effect. The hymn before the sermon, "O Lord, how joyful 'tis to see," was sung to "Intercession," and was joined in heartily by the congregation. An appropriate sermon was preached by the Right Rev. Bishop Ryan, from the word "Hallelujah." This was followed by the Old Hundredth Psalm; and at the end of the service Clark Whitfeld's well-known anthem, "In Jewry is God known," was given. The choir left the church singing the recessional hymn, "There is a blessed home." The arrangements were under the superintendence of Mr. A. R. Swaine, organist and choirmaster of the Parish Church, who presided at the organ, assisted by Mr. A. Swaine, organist of Bingley Parish Church.

BRIDGEWATER.—An organ chamber having been built on the north side of St. John's Chancel, and the organ considerably enlarged and improved, at a cost of about £250, opening services took place on Thursday, the 25th May. The preacher in the morning was the Rev. Prebendary Clark, vicar of St. Mary's, Taunton; and in the evening, the Rev. Prebendary Buller, vicar of Over-Stowey, and rural Dean. Great credit is due to the new organist, Mr. William C. Dyer, for the manner in which the choir rendered the psalms and a full service. The tone and appearance of the organ were greatly admired. The front is very handsome, being coloured blue and gold. Messrs. Bryceson and Sons, of London, were entrusted with the improvements of the instrument which have been so satisfactorily carried out.

DONCASTER.—The Doncaster Choral Union held its eighth annual festival in the Parish Church on Thursday, the 1st ult. There were thirty-five choirs present, the number of singers being 628, of whom 277 were surpliced. The chants in the morning service were Gregorian, and in the evening Anglican. The "Te Deum," sung to the Ambrosian melody, was exceedingly effective, the purity of tone and correctness of intonation (especially in the verses for trebles only), showing a great improvement on former festivals. The "Magnificat" was set to two single chants, the Doncaster choir singing one in harmony in certain verses, and the great choir singing the other in unison, the effect of which was exceedingly good. An important feature of the evening service was the anthem, "How lovely are the messengers," from St. Paul, which was sung with the greatest care and precision. The hymns were, as usual, from both ancient and modern sources (including two composed for the festival by the Rev. H. F. Sheppard), and were magnificently rendered. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. H. F. Sheppard, the precentor to the Union, and the lessons were read by the Rev. Francis Pigou, vicar, and the Rev. F. F. Lambert. The morning sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Gatty, sub-dean of York, and the evening sermon by the Rev. R. J. Banks, vicar of Womersley. J. Rogers, Esq., presided at the fine organ with his usual skill and taste, and the festival was conducted by Mr. J. H. Eyre, the organising choirmaster. The church was crowded, and the collections amounted to £43 1s. 8d.

GREAT YARMOUTH.—The concert of the Great Yarmouth Musical Society on Tuesday, the 23rd May, was unquestionably the best ever given by this Association. The Oratorio selected for performance was Handel's Judas Maccabæus, the principal parts in which were sustained by the Sisters Doria, Mr. G. F. Carter (of the Westminster Abbey choir), and Mr. W. N. Smith (of the Norwich Cathedral choir), the work being under the able conductorship of Mr. H. Stonex, organist of the Parish Church of St. Nicholas, Yarmouth. All the solos were exceedingly well rendered, "Pious orgies" and "O Liberty," by Madlle. Clara Doria, and "Arm, arm, ye brave," by Mr. W. N. Smith, especially, producing a marked effect upon the audience. The singing of the choruses exhibited the result of careful rehearsal and studious training on the part of the indefatigable conductor, Mr. Stonex. "Hear us, O Lord," being particularly worthy of commendation both for management of tone and precision. There was a very large audience.

HALIFAX.—On Whit Tuesday, the eighth commemoration of the Sunday School Jubilee took place in the Halifax Piece Hall, with brilliant success. At ten o'clock the various schools entered the Hall, each accompanied by a band. The singing was exceedingly good, especially in the hymns composed for the occasion by Mr Dean and Mr. T. Wadsworth, both of which are spoken of by the local press in the highest terms. "The Heavens are telling," the "Hallelujah," and the National Anthem were also sung with admirable effect, and received the most enthusiastic applause. Mr. Dean conducted with much precision and judgment. The whole of the music (tunes and choruses) was specially arranged for the band in sixteen instrumental parts, by Mr. T. Wadsworth. The scholars' copy of the Hallelujah Chorus and all the drum accompaniments were by Mr. Dean.

HARROW.—On Tuesday, the 30th May, the Annual Fancy Sale for the benefit of the Industrial Home of Girls, 125, Sloane Street, London, was held in the National Schools. The number of visitors was largely increased in the evening, in consequence of Dr. Vellère's band of young pupils performing an excellent selection of pieces during the sale. The doctor's eldest son, Sydney Horace, played, with much success, "O ruddier than the cherry," on the euphonium, and the cornet solos in two pieces, arranged by Dr. Vellère, were also admirably rendered by H. C. Crapp. Harrow is largely indebted to the exertions of the doctor; for on many occasions his efficient little band has aided the cause of charity by performing in public; and it is but fair to add that his young pupils appear to have as much pleasure in contributing their talents towards the good cause as their tutor has in preparing them for it. The English and Continental College at Harrow, of which Dr. Vellère is Principal, is not a musical academy; but the doctor claims to have introduced a system of tuition, by which boys, having no previous knowledge of the art, are enabled to play easy tunes after a very few lessons.

HEREFORD.—On Thursday evening, the 25th May, a miscellaneous concert was given at the Shire Hall, by the Cathedral choir, assisted by the Choral Society, for the benefit of Mr. R. Bradley, who has left the city for an engagement at his native place in Yorkshire. Mr. Bradley has been one of the principal bass singers in the Cathedral choir for fifteen years, and during that time has gained the esteem of all with whom he came in contact. Several choral pieces were included in the selection, amongst which may be mentioned Miss Agnes Zimmermann's part-song, "To daffodils," which was a novelty here, and produced a marked effect with the audience. Mrs. Sicklemore made an excellent début, in a song by F. Clay, "She wandered down the mountain side," receiving the most encouraging and well-deserved applause. Miss L. Broad was also highly successful in Wallace's Cradle song, "Sweet and low," which, as well as Mrs. Sicklemore's song, was enthusiastically re-demanded. The Revs. W. D. V. Duncombe, A. Robinson, T. M. Everett, Taylor, and G. M. Custance contributed solos with admirable effect, and elicited the warmest marks of approbation. A solo on the concertina was excellently played by Mr. Bezant, and the instrumentalists of the Choral Society performed the opening overture to each part.——THE members of the Hereford Choral Society gave their Midsummer concert in the Shire Hall, on Wednesday, the 14th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Townshend Smith. There was a fashionable audience, and in the front division not an empty stall was to be seen. The programme consisted of part-songs, songs, and instrumental music. The vocal soloists were Mrs. F. Bodenham, Miss L. Broad, Mr. Swire, and the Revs. A. Robinson and W. D. V. Duncombe. Instrumental solos were performed by Mr. G. Davis (violin) and Mr. Albert Jones (cornet). All the part-songs were very creditably rendered. Miss L. Broad sang her solo with much expression, and Mrs. Bodenham was encored in both her songs. Mr. Swire and the Revs. Duncombe and Robinson were also highly successful, their songs being re-demanded. The instrumental solos were very well played, and Mr. Davies (who is quite young) bids fair to be a first-class violinist. Upon the whole the concert was a success.

HONLEY.—The annual festival in connection with St. Mary's Church took place on the 28th May. The Psalms were chanted to two single chants—one by Cooper in E, and the other by Barnby in E. The anthem was "I was glad when they said unto me" (Sir George Elvey). The music was effectively rendered by the choir, which was augmented for the occasion to upwards of 90 voices. Mr. J. C. Beaumont displayed considerable skill and judgment as organist.

LEEDS.—The last Organ Recital for the season took place at the Town Hall, on the 13th ult. The programme included Handel's Organ Concerto, No. 2 (B flat); a selection from Beethoven's sonata in F flat, op. 7; a Fantasia in the form of an offertoire (C major), by Berthold Tours; and a first performance of a Romanza by Goss-lond in C minor. The selection was beautifully played throughout, and there was an appreciative audience. Since August last Dr. Spark has introduced at these interesting Recitals a large number of classical works; and by the excellence of his performance, and the variety of the selection, has succeeded in fully establishing these entertainments in public favour.

LIVERPOOL.—The thirty-fifth open rehearsal of the Societa Armonica, of which Mr. Armstrong is the conductor, and Mr. Lawson the leader, took place at the Institute, Mount Street, on Saturday evening, the 10th ult. The programme consisted of selections from Auber, Mozart, Haydn, Donizetti, Bishop, &c. A Kyrie, by Mozart, was creditably given by the chorus, the full orchestral accompaniment adding much to the effect. Miss Monkhouse, in the air "Gratias Agimus" (Guglielmi), with the clarionet obbligato, by Mr. Haddrell, and accompaniment of string and wind instruments, was rapturously encored. The singing of the choruses, "Merry boys, away," "Now tramp," and "The gipsy tent" was characterised by much vigour and precision, and Mr. Thomas Foulkes was highly successful in his rendering of the aria, "Fra poco" (Donizetti). Haydn's Symphony in D, No. 7, and the Overtures to Bachantinne (Generali) and Masaniello (Auber), were well played by the band.

LYMINGTON.—On Tuesday evening, the 20th ult., the Philharmonic Society gave an excellent concert in the Assembly Rooms, before a large and fashionable audience. Before the commencement of the performance, Mrs. Warren Peacocke (of Efford House) stepped forward, and on behalf of Lord George Gordon Lennox presented Mr. Klitz with a very handsome ivory baton, to mark the sense entertained by his lordship, and the other ladies and gentlemen, of Mr. Klitz's musical abilities, as well as an acknowledgment of his exertions as conductor and director of this society. Mr. Klitz replied in a few words, which were received with a hearty round of applause, and other most gratifying compliments from all present on the platform. The programme was well selected, and contained amongst the instrumental pieces Mozart's Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin (excellently played by Mr. Morant and Mr. C. Fletcher); Beethoven's Septett, arranged by Holst, for pianoforte, harp, violin, concertina and violoncello, (the executants being Mrs. Warren Peacocke, Mrs. Deschamps de la Tour, Messrs. Morant, Fletcher, Conway and Parkinson); a solo on the violin by Mr. Charles Fletcher, composed for and dedicated to him by Mrs. Deschamps de la Tour; and the "Toy Symphony" of Haydn. Vocal solos were given with much success by Mrs. Deschamps de la Tour and the Rev. Ernest Williams. Mrs. Brown's pianoforte performances were also an important feature in the concert, and her accompaniments to some of the vocal music were much admired. The concert was in every respect a decided success.——We have much pleasure in stating that Mrs. S. St. Barbe has lately presented Mr. R. A. Klitz, Organist and Choirmaster of the church choir, with a valuable set of silver tea service, in recognition of his important services in connection with the recent assembly of the choir in the neighbourhood at Beaulieu.

MELBOURNE.—The prospectus of the Philharmonic Society for the present season proves that the committee is resolved to carry out the objects of the association with the most praiseworthy energy. The band and chorus is announced to consist of 300 performers; and the works promised to the subscribers are Mendelssohn's Elijah and Hymn of Praise, Haydn's Seasons, Spohr's Last Judgment, and Handel's Messiah and Israel in Egypt.

NEWARK.—The annual meeting of the Notts Choral Union was held, by the kind permission of the vicar, for the first time in the Parish Church, on Tuesday, the 23rd May, when 580 singers took part in the services. The processional hymns, "Rejoice, ye pure in heart," to a tune by Mr. W. H. Monk, and "We march to victory," to a tune by Mr. G. F. Cobb, were sung with a precision not attained at any previous meeting. The Venite and Psalms were chanted with great vigour and effect, as was also the Benedictus, all being set to Gregorian melodies. The Ambrosian Te Deum had evidently been practised too slowly, but Mr. Reay tried his utmost to remedy the defect. The chorale from Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise was, on the whole, well sung; and the hymn, "Jesu dulcis memoria," was, perhaps, the most successful thing of the morning, the organ accompaniments of the unison verses being treated in a novel and highly effective manner by Mr. Reay. The Communion music was from the service in F, by Dr. Dykes, the Kyrie of which was, more especially, excellently rendered. In the afternoon Sir F. Ouseley's anthem, "It came even to pass," was most effectively given, the quartet for principal voices being admirably sung by members of the Newark choir. The great success of this meeting was mainly due to the able handling of the magnificent organ by Mr. Reay, and the unmistakable manner in which he marked the time of the different pieces. Before and after the services, the organist performed a selection of Fugues and Voluntaries by Bach, Smart, Wely, and other composers for the instrument. We must not omit to state that the morning and evening services were intoned with great precision and effect by the Rev. F. R. Smith, of Southwell, and the Hon. and Rev. G. J. Willoughby, rector of Wollaton. The sermons were preached, in the morning by the Rev. Erskine Clarke, of Derby, and in the afternoon by the Dean of York.

RAMSGATE.—On Monday, the 19th ult., the pupils of Chatham House School presented Mr. J. F. Thorne, Organist of St. Mary's Church, on the occasion of his retirement from the post of music master to the school, which he has held for the last ten years, with a very handsome silver claret jug, with a suitable inscription engraved upon it, accompanied by a letter, numerously signed, expressive of their esteem and appreciation of his long and faithful services. In losing Mr. Thorne the pupils felt that they were parting from one who had ever striven with the utmost zeal and ability to do them justice and to ensure their progress; and they were naturally anxious to show their gratitude and testify their great regret at his loss.

ROCK FERRY.—The eighth annual festival of the Wirral Church Choir Association was held on the 14th ult. at St. Peter's Church. The Association numbers eighteen choirs, of which sixteen were represented. The choirmaster, Mr. Pickering, has been for some time unceasing in his endeavours to train the several choirs for this occasion, and the result was that the music was, on the whole, most satisfactorily given. All the chants were Anglican, and the "Te Deum" was by Sullivan. There was no anthem in the morning service, the hymn "How long, O Lord, our Saviour," being substituted for it. For the introit was sung the hymn "Lord, when before Thy throne we meet," to a tune by Barnby, all the voices singing the melody. At the afternoon service the chants were—for the Psalms for the day, by Sir G. Elvey and the Rev. W. H. Havergal; for the Magnificat by Barnby; and for the Nunc Dimittis by Dr. R. P. Stewart. The anthem, which was admirably rendered, was Goss's "O, taste and see." Mr. Pickering conducted, and the accompaniments were excellently played by the organist, Mr. W. R. Pemberton.

SOUTHAM.—The annual festival of the Southam District Choral Association was held at the Parish Church of St. James, Southam, on Thursday, the 25th May. The choirs of Southam, Long Hedington, Stockton, Farnborough, Ovon-Dassett, Offchurch, and Hunningham (numbering 131 voices), taking part in the service, which was intoned by the Rev. Digby Coates Freedy. Mr. Hardacre, the choirmaster to the Association, had taken great pains in training the choirs, the result being that the performance was very creditable to all concerned. The organ was well played by Mr. Barkshire, of Southam, the voluntaries "Fac ut Portem," from a Stabat Mater, and the March from Polycarp, being both exceedingly well rendered.

STOCKPORT.—On the 22nd May a concert was given at the Hazel Grove Mechanics' Institution, in aid of the building fund, before a numerous audience. The programme consisted of an excellent selection of glees, songs, duets, &c, all of which were admirably rendered. Solos were given with much success by Misses Bramhall, Burton, Dickie, Lambert, Lee, Sumner; Messrs. Rubery, Greenhalgh, Haworth, and Gaskill. At the close of the concert Mr. J. Norbury, Chairman of the Directors, proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. H. Collier, Mr. Dickie, and the ladies and gentlemen of the choir for their valuable and gratuitous services.

TRURO.—The festivities connected with the second meeting of the Royal Cornwall Agricultural Society were brought to a close on the 15th ult., with a concert of sacred and secular music. The vocalists were Mesdames Horne and Poole, Messrs. Rogers and Lander. The choruses in the sacred part were given with admirable precision and effect by the members of the Truro Oratorio Society. Mr. G. Hele conducted with much energy; his brother, Mr. John Hele, Mus. Bac., Oxon., was the organist; and pianoforte accompaniments were given by Mrs. Carter, Mr. Trembath, and Mr. J. Hele. The programme comprised music of the highest character and of interesting variety. The audience was a brilliant one, the concert-hall being crowded in every part.

WELLS.—On Saturday, the 10th ult., Mr. Lavington, organist of Wells Cathedral, was presented with the following musical works, handsomely bound: Mendelssohn's Elijah and St. Paul, Seba tian Bach's Passion-Musik and "Organ Studies," 2 vols. Also an address inscribed on vellum with the names of the subscribers (in number 275), and with a purse containing about £280, as a mark of respect and esteem, from a number of his friends. Mr. Lavington, in gratefully accepting the gift, begged the committee to take any means in their power to convey to the subscribers his deep sense of their kindness; and the assurance that it will ever be a source of heartfelt pleasure to him to know that in his long professional connection with Wells and its Cathedral, his character has been so kindly appreciated.

VESPER CANTICLES. New, simple, and effective Settings. Six numbers ready, price 1d. each. By J. M. BENTLEY. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.

". . . . Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services." . . . . . they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.

"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Fowle's Musical Journal.

HEMY'S ROYAL MODERN PIANOFORTE TUTOR. Price Five Shillings.

The Daily Telegraph of May 24th, speaking of this popular work, says:—

"If everybody having access to a piano be not a pianist, the reason lies elsewhere than in a want of instruction books. So many are these helps to efficiency, that it is hard to believe in a speciality for each; and, as a matter of fact, one very much resembles another. A distinction must be made, however, in favour of Mr. H. F. Hemy's 'Royal Modern Tutor,' which aims chiefly to pave a royal road to the art of counting time, and of properly connecting the parts for both hands. 'This the author trusts he has accomplished,' to quote his own words, 'by inserting the time figured between the treble and bass clef staves, and connecting the notes required to be played by each hand, and the mode of counting together—thus presenting the whole to the eye in so clear a form as to be intelligible to the youngest child learning music.' The plan is simple and ingenious, representing, perhaps, as much help as can be given in a difficult part of the student's course. In other respects, the book is one of merit Its instructions are clear, and a proper graduation of the lessons is carefully observed. We should add that a new and well-got-up edition has been issued by Messrs. Metzler and Co."

AUGUST 1, 1871.

ON THE VALUE OF THE DISSONANCE IN MUSICAL THEORY.

By Joseph Green (Author of the "Tritone").

In comparing the ancient with the modern tonality it is not enough to point out in the latter the relative instead of absolute position of the tritone in the scale. This has been done over and over again for the last two hundred years; but it should be shown that if the scale be a melodic representative of a prior harmonic fact, the key, the tritone is the sole condition and characteristic of the scale. Where that interval is nominally absent, we should have nothing but vacuity, were not the natural functions of the interval always existing. Where it is multiplied in the scale, we have the necessary vagueness of conflicting relations.

For the information of the general reader this may be illustrated by the old plan of reducing the seven diatonic scales to one pitch, say the diapason C to c, and introducing the chromatic alterations corresponding to the different successions of tones and semitones. The Greek names of the several modes and scales in the following diagram are not given as correct. Upon that special and historical question there is still much divergence of opinion.* The nomenclature in the diagram is sufficiently usual to serve as a guide in distinguishing one scale or tetrachord from another.

Modes...	Initial notes.	1st tetrachord. C d. e. F.	2nd tetrachord. G a b. c	Modern Keys.
Ionian	C	1 2 3 4. (Ionian.)	1 2 3 4. (Ionian.)	C♮
Dorian	D	1 2 3♭ 4 (Dorian.)	1 2 3♭ 4 (Dorian.)	B♭
Phrygian	E	1. 2♭. 3♭. 4 (Phrygian.)	1 2♭ 3♭ 4 (Phrygian.)	A♭
Lydian	F	1. 2 3. 4♯ (Ionian and augmented.)	1 2 3 4. (Ionian.)	G♮
Mixolydian	G	1. 2. 3. 4 (Ionian.)	1. 2. 3♭. 4. (Dorian.)	F♮
Æolian	A	1. 2. 3♭. 4. (Dorian.)	1. 2♭. 3♭. 4. (Phrygian.)	E♭

Transcribing these figures into musical notation, and always commencing on the same note, C♮ for example, we find that in each scale there is only one tritone corresponding to the tonic C♮ or B♭, &c.

Conforming to that system, the first three modes or scales the Ionian, the Dorian and Phrygian are regular, inasmuch as both tetrachords in each scale are of the same genus and mode. The remaining three are formed by joining together tetrachords of different modes, and the fourth scale contains one chromatically altered tetrachord or interval of the tritone, forbidden and avoided by the ancients with reason when it occurred between the extreme notes of the tetrachords upon which the scale was nominally constructed. When by their arbitrary system the Greeks arrived at the scale of F, they made use of a chromatic alteration to correct the 4♯; or, what is the same thing, they changed the B♮ into B♭—the Lydian mode, as we call the diatonic scale of F♮, becomes by that alteration the same as the Ionian mode, or natural major scale.

Of the three modes that are regular—the Ionian the Dorian, and the Phrygian—from the tetrachords of which all the other scales are formed, there is one, the Phrygian, that contains a certain peculiarity. The cause of the peculiarity will aid us still more in following the development, and indicating the truth, of the modern harmonic system founded on the dissonance.

Taking the Phrygian mode as it appears in the diagram, it is the same as if we were playing in the key of A♭, but chose to begin and end on the note C♮. But it is clear that upon whatever note we choose to begin, we do not theoretically alter the key. Conversely, if we confine ourselves to the scale of C♮, and commence upon E♮, or upon any other note, the tonic relation is always to C♮, and for the reason reiterated, that the relation is determined by the one tritone employed, which naturally resolves or reposes as an harmonic interval on a tonic and its third.

The first tetrachord of the Phrygian mode, or scale of E♮ but limited to the materials of the scale of C♮, commences with a semitone. In a melodic progression by semitones, the upper one of any two semitones in ascending, and in a less degree the lower one in descending, is a point of repose or tonality. We can thus, by the way, understand that when the moderns speak of a "chromatic scale" they use the term scale only as a convenient expression to denote a certain arrangement of materials, but without any fixed relation. Why we should perceive this sense of repose in the upper note of a semitone may hereafter be explained by psychological reasons. At present we rest content with unscientifically accounting for one fact by another equally inexplicable; namely, that we seek repose by the shortest interval. But receiving that explanation for so much as it is worth, we can get a little beyond it by falling on the known harmonic facts of sensation which underlie the melodic. The natural resolution of the tritone, in the normal major scale, is by semitones. The upper note rises, always by a semitone, to the tonic; the lower note descends to the third of that tonic. The third, when it is a question of mode, may be either major or minor. The upper note, therefore, of a semitone in an ascending melody, represents the upper note of the harmonic interval, the tritone, that is the seventh note of the scale; as, in a descending melody, the lower note of a semitone would be the fourth of the scale.

These familiar facts enable us to see why out of tetrachords forming the three regular diatonic scales, the Ionian tetrachord, consisting of tone, tone and semitone; the Dorian, consisting of tone, semitone, and tone; and the Phrygian, consisting of semitone, tone, and tone; the first should be the most complete, as the semitone is between the penultimate note and the final note or nominal tonic of the ascending tetrachord. In the second the semitone is between the second and third note; and according to the theory of semitone progression, the tonic would in modern phraseology be that of the relative major key of the minor mode of the initial note of the tetrachord. In the third, the semitone occurs between the first and second notes, giving a tonic which has no immediate relation either to the initial or final note. Into this last and somewhat imperfect and vague tetrachord—the Phrygian—the ancients instinctively introduced a new semitone between the penultimate and final notes, thus leaving between the second and third notes a gap or interval known as the "superfluous second." This last arrangement of the tones and semitones of a tetrachord represents the chromatic genus of the Greeks; and it is employed by the moderns to correct the defects of the Phrygian tetrachord, which has by rights no distinctive place, or only a secondary place in our system.

* In giving Greek names to the different tetrachords as well as the complete scales, I have followed the plan of M. Tiron (Etudes sur la musique Grecque). But I have not adopted the nomenclature he suggests.

For example, the modern major diatonic scale is—

Tetrachord.				Tetrachord.
1	2.	3.	4.	5.	6.	7.	I.
Ionian.				Ionian.

The ascending minor scale as employed in practice is—

Dorian.				Ionian.
1.	2.	3♭.	4.	5.	6.	7.	I.

The descending minor scale is—

Dorian.				Phrygian.
1.	2.	3♭.	4	5	6♭.	7♭.	I.

The true and theoretic minor scale ascending is—

Dorian.				Chromatic.
1.	2.	3♭.	4.	5	6♭	7♮.	I.

The latter disposition contains in the numbers 4 and 7 the tritone proper to the major scale; and in the numbers 2 and 6♭, the tritone of the relative major key of its minor mode.

The series of six or seven diatonic scales are thus, from harmonic reasons, reduced to one scale or key, with its two modes. By musical methods, more or less similar to the one here employed or by abstruser methods much different, the ancient modes have, during a space of two thousand years, undergone a gradual reduction from the number of fifteen, thirteen, or twelve, to seven; and, again, by the exclusion of the augmented tetrachords to five; subsequently to four by St. Ambrose in the fourth century; and finally to two in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.

This worn subject would scarcely need so superficial a sketch as the preceding, except as another illustration of the process of evolution and of the harmonic basis of the scale, were it not that amongst musicians there are so many who still superstitiously adhere to the mathematical elements, or the so-called first principles of music; whilst in another direction some of our organists and precentors, perhaps from associations natural to the half-sacredness of their calling, have an unreasoning veneration of the old tonality.

As for mathematics, the services rendered by that science in certain mechanical requirements of the musical art cannot be over estimated. But for upwards of three centuries the principles of the technical theory of music have become more and more independent till sixty years ago, Reicha dispatched the arithmetical questions in a footnote; and a few years later they were altogether ignored by Fetis and his continental contemporaries.*

In regard to tonality, there is in point of fact less difference than is generally thought between the old and the new. The one includes the other. The number of different keys in the modern system is, or should be, a source of variety. But the abuse of the modern tonal system has on the contrary led to something very much akin to monotony by the continued interchange of tonic, subdominant and dominant, and by conventional restraints in the succession of chords. But this effect is rather induced than necessitated by the system.

* M. Fétis, in his preface to his Traité d'Harmonie, says:—"Nature provides the elements of music only in a multitude of sounds differing in pitch, duration, and intensity. Amongst those sounds there are certain differences, which at once affect our sensations and become the object of especial attention. Under the influence of the will and our sensibilities the mind classifies those different relations, each one corresponding to a particular order of emotions, sentiments, and ideas. Those series of effects become the types of tonalities and rhythms, having fixed results, which the imagination employs as the materials of its art-creations."

M. Radau, in his popular treatise on acoustics, quotes this passage from Fétis, and adds, "après cela ne faudrait-il pas tirer l'échelle?"

If M. Radau means the abstract scale built up of mathematical proportions, without any other raison d'être, his question might be answered in the affirmative. He acknowledges himself that the mathematicians have done no more than confirm the empirical methods of musicians; and the recent theories of Helmholtz which M. Radau has assisted in propagating, certainly tend more and more to justify the technical procedure of Fétis and his school. We may ultimately find, for instance, that a system of temperament is not only a necessary evil, an accommodation of mathematical principles to the imperfection of instruments or to the crotchets of musicians, but a system required by the very structure of our organs of hearing, and as the basis of a technical theory of music. Our two ears, as physiologists tell us, are differently attuned. There is, as M. Radau reminds us, a La gauche and a La droite.

When Helmholtz gives us a graphic representation of the pleasant vales of consonance, and of the rugged heights of dissonance, we see in his diagram that the most dissonant intervals employed by musicians correspond only to about one-third to two-thirds of the height of the alp-like elevations at the two extremes of the octave. Climbing beyond that point, we come to minute intervals less than a semitone. From his general theory, as far as I know it, I judge that the maximum of dissonance is an interval corresponding to the semitone. At all events, calculating from the C_2, the diatonic semitone gives the maximum of dissonance between the primaries. In intervals within beating distance, the effect of overtones is not so much a question; but between the first harmonics of the semitone the number of beats is beyond the maximum, whereas the primaries of the quarter tone are under, and its first harmonics within the maximum of 30 to 40 beats; and the comma is in both instances much under the maximum. The phenomena of the tremolo of the human voice and of the blending of sounds, as in the three strings of a pianoforte, not completely in unison, must, I presume, be also referred to the underlying physiological theory; to the agitation in small intervals, of the fibres of the ear adjacent to the two primaries, resulting in fusion or blurr.

On the other hand the Corti fibres, we are told, form a microscopic lute of 3000 strings "capable of analysing the motion, no matter how complicated, of the external air" (Tyndall). This is no doubt true of very minute melodic intervals, and in a less degree of harmonic intervals taken singly. But it is doubtful if the microscopic powers of the lute, unaided by an acoustic lens yet to be invented, will enable us to discriminate with such exactitude amidst the hurricane of conflicting sounds which proceed from a modern orchestra. And it may be considered certain, that whatever may be true of the abstract intervals, the general tonic relation of several intervals combined will not be impaired by comparatively slight impurities. Even in an interval so wide as a fourth, when combined with another interval, the common relation to a tonic overpowers its minor relation to a separate root, from which it is derived by calculation. As every musician knows, the real subject in dispute turns upon the truth of that point; upon the practical identity of the fourth in one string, C to C, and the flat seventh in another string G to G, a fourth below.

The merely mechanical question of attunement must not be allowed to comprehend the whole theory of music. Beyond the obvious physical phenomena, there are questions of colour and contrast and general relationship of sounds, equally necessary as elements of a technical theory, and not so easily demonstrated by arithmetic. After all, it is open to doubt, whether, if given a certain relationship, a certain regularity of proportions, absolute exactitude would not mar, rather than improve some of the musical effects; those of minor intervals for example, which owe their musical properties to their comparative dissonance. Nearly a century ago the French savans came to the conclusion, that facts then unknown might overturn the edifice based on calculation, and that the true laws which regulate the relations of musical intervals were yet to be discovered.

All the diversity and vagueness of plain chant which is nominally founded on one key, but really consists of incessant but imperfectly established modulations, can be more systematically accomplished in modern harmony by simply avoiding the dissonant chords which indicate or establish a particular tonic. The harmonizations we occasionally see at the present day, of the Gregorian tones, which are founded on a partially developed system, are often examples of a limited view of the capacities of the new tonality, and also of a want of respect for the specialties of the old. Organists will tell us, that people "won't stand" the ascent in certain chords of a fourth or of the flattened seventh of the key. But there is nothing in those progressions incompatible with the principles of the modern tonality. If a chord has certain fixed and distinct functions, its alteration or retrenchment, under given conditions, may surely impair without destroying those functions. If every consonant chord performs, though imperfectly, the functions of a dissonant chord, there is no further mystery in plain chant; and its intimate connection with, or rather its absorption into, the modern system is made thoroughly clear.

The evolution of a technical musical theory has been a very simple and gradual growth, not after all differing much in its present stage from the faintest traces we have of its origin. This can be no matter of surprise if our common sensations are the basis, not only of the æsthetical effects, but also of a theoretical system of music. When knowledge is more advanced, it is possible that some general and analogous law of proportion will be evinced in our sensations of touch, taste and colour, as well as sound. But the "fatal facility" we often hear of, with which sound lends itself to mathematical measurement, if destined to be of more value than ever to science, as affording a guide and illustration in newer branches of enquiry, has certainly retarded rather than accelerated the development of music as an art. The rapid and grand progress of music in the last two centuries is a matter mostly independent of theory. The theoretical changes that preceded, or arose simultaneously with that advance are slight in comparison with other technical and mere mechanical improvements comprehended under the heads of notation, rhythm, figuration and instrumentation. The chief theoretical innovation was the development of the science of chords and the gradual separation of what is commonly denominated the "stratified" from the "columnar" system in counterpoint; which to explain shortly, is the difference between, on the one hand, harmonizing two melodies or parts according to rules drawn from the pleasing or unpleasing succession of abstract intervals, and on the other hand, referring those intervals to the complete chords of which they are component parts.

The first method was born naturally of the old system of tonality; and beyond the bounds of that system, in spite of the affectation of certain principles of proportion borrowed from the harmonicians, the method had in reality no technical test or guide other than the separate effect of the several intervals as they successively appeared in the layers or strata resulting from the conduct of two or more parts in the harmony.

In the modern methods, all intervals are referred either to a temporary bass note given by the inversion of a chord, a system introduced by Rameau, and which represents the transition from the old to the newer methods; or they are referred exclusively to the fundamental note of abstract chords, or finally to the tonic of the key as well, to which tonic the chords and their component intervals have an harmonic relation, more or less fixed according to the completeness of the chords.

The modern science of chords supersedes most of the old rules of counterpoint. Those rules form a vast collection, which as a truly monumental record of accumulated wisdom and precedent, as well as in their various complications and contradictions very much resemble the common law of England.

The continued process of codifying a mass of precedents, their reduction to some settled technical principle, and their gradual relaxation in favour of modern wants occasioned by a certain fusion in the aims of the several arts, represent the actual state of musical theory.

Were it allowable here to enter more fully into technical matters it would be easy by turning over the leaves of five or six representative works on musical theory out of the crowd which have appeared since the time of Rameau to show the almost insensible evolution of modern ideas on the subject, and how singularly in some respects they have returned to the tetrachordal doctrines of the Greeks. Apart from questions of detail the system of Rameau is, musically speaking, based upon the conjunct pentachords F—C—G, that at once carry us out of the octave. Momigny, nearly half a century later, returns to the conjunct tetrachords G—C—F; the tonic C being the centre of attraction. The triad on the C, possesses a double function as the subdominant of G and the dominant of F. Reciprocally, the triad on F as the subdominant and the triad on G as the dominant of C, gravitate in contrary directions towards that centre. Here at least, was a distinct indication of that relationship of chords founded on the mediation of the dissonance, and now known as the harmonic key, a discovery which has since been altered in many respects, and further developed by subsequent writers, some of whom exclude the subdominant altogether as a root chord in the key.

On the other hand, in the triads of Rameau, which are glued together carpenter-fashion, there is no immediate suggestion of any musical principle whatever. They served nevertheless as a solid foundation for an abstract, but very generally received system in which the chords were simply built up as separate materials without fixed relation. The modern physicists too, employ it as a convenient method of manufacturing a scale based on the principles of adjunct triads or concords; the dissonance upon which our whole system of tonality is founded, being left to adjust itself. But that method contains no living, no dynamical principle for the musical student to seize at once as a guide in the movement of the harmony.

The two methods of treating chords, as abstract combinations, and as having fixed tonic relations, began to disclose their differences contemporaneously with Rameau himself. Anyone accustomed to enquiries into musical principles, has no occasion to wade through the treatises which have been published from the time of Marpurg to that of Kollman and G. Weber, Logier and Spinola, to see at once the decay of the abstract and geometrical principles, the reduction of harmony to two chords, and theoretically to one operation and hence the gradual evolution of the harmonic key. It must be confessed, that after the first few pages, all treatises on harmony converge towards and end in the same thing. But still there is a right and a wrong way of presenting the same facts; and any serious error in this respect will give the musical student years of unnecessary labour.

Old authors, it may be said, wrote very good music before the key, chords and Rameau were much heard of. It is quite true that the few empirical rules of harmony by which a composer will guide and more especially correct the outpourings of his genius already well attuned by nature, have existed without material alteration for centuries. But musical systems are made for those who wish to analyse music as well as for those who write it. The young composer, indeed, learns less by principles than by models and by practice; which means by a gradual familiarity with a certain association of chords and phrases, just as in the common tongue or in a foreign tongue, we learn to speak. The grand faculty for the composer is memory, and the character of his own music will bear the impress of the works he has studied and best remembers, no matter how great may be his native originality.

The musician does not limn or chisel with the fidelity of the workers in the plastic arts, but he draws his materials from the stores of his own memory as they do when they are not absolutely copying external objects. That the musician's work should be more deeply tinged than theirs by the inner character and emotions of the artist, is only a proof that his medium of expression if more condensed and powerful, is less comprehensive and articulate, or otherwise he would describe as well as suggest. But the materials of the composer's work are not altogether unsubstantial, because he has to gather them by introspection. Indeed it would be an easy matter, visibly and graphically to dissect the growth and almost mechanical evolution of the shaped materials of the art, branch by branch, blossom by blossom, from the phrases and harmonies of Beethoven and Wagner, to those of Adam de la Hale.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Thanks to the recent revival of "Il Matrimonio Segreto" by the Opera Buffa Company, at the Lyceum Theatre, Cimarosa's music has once more been heard; and so fresh and genial does it sound, even to ears accustomed to the modern Italian school, that we are beginning to search amongst the other works of this once celebrated composer for the best specimens of a style which, although perhaps slightly antiquated, is too truly dramatic and spontaneous to be allowed to die out. Whether "Le Astuzie Femminili," produced at the Royal Italian Opera on the 15th ult., is the most favourable example that could have been selected may be open to doubt; but that it possesses a continuous flow of melody and is written throughout with that facile grace which is so characteristic of all Cimarosa's Operas can scarcely be questioned; and the enthusiastic applause with which it was greeted amply attested that a real work of art can never grow old. The plot of the Opera has but little interest—turning entirely upon the devices resorted to by two lovers to get rid of rival suitors to the lady—but it serves admirably as a vehicle for music. Strangely enough, there is not a chorus throughout the work; but so humorous and bustling are the concerted pieces, which follow in quick succession, that this omission is never felt. The first act contains two quartets which are perfectly masterly in construction—one in which the whole of the characters assembled deride and laugh at the newly arrived Giampaolo, being especially effective—and the finale to the act may also be cited as an excellent piece of dramatic writing. The concerted music is indeed the strongest part of the work—a quartet in the second act, and the finale to the Opera, ending with the Russian dance, being so full of bright melody and so instinct with that life and vivacity which distinguishes the more elaborate pieces in the composer's "Matrimonio Segreto" that the audience appeared fairly taken by surprise; and even the singers seemed astonished at the repeated encores to which they were compelled to respond. Some of the solos are extremely graceful, the best being an air for Ersilia, "D'amor la face," and one (introduced) for the contralto, "Non son bella, non son bruta" (exquisitely sung by Madame Scalchi and encored); and we must not omit to mention a duet for the two lovers, "Qui dolcemente spira," which was effectively given by Madlle. Sessi and Signor Bettini. The Opera was on the whole well sung. The part of Bellina appeared excellently suited for Madlle. Sessi. and Signor Bettini, who at first did not seem in his usual voice, afterwards gave much effect to his music, especially where he enters in the disguise of a Hungarian officer. Madame Vanzini was an efficient Ersilia, and the small part of Leonora was carefully sung by Madame Scalchi. Signor Ciampi, although somewhat hard, as usual, was fairly successful in Giampaolo, and Dr. Romualdo found an efficient representative in Signor Cotogni. We sincerely hope that the success of this Opera will justify the management in re-producing it at an earlier period next season. The other two events at this establishment have been the first appearance of Madame Patti as Valentina in "Les Huguenots," and the benefit and final performance of Signor Mario. Madame Patti of course cannot be bad in anything; but her good sense will tell her that, in spite of deceptive bouquets and recalls, she had better keep to the line of characters for which nature has so eminently fitted her. Signor Mario's farewell of the public was, as might be expected, a heartfelt demonstration of almost affectionate regard; such an ovation has rarely been witnessed at our coldly fashionable Italian Opera House. The establishment closed on the 22nd ult.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

There is but little to record of the performances at this establishment during the past month. In "Rigoletto" M. Capoul, as the Duke, was somewhat too demonstrative, but sang well, creating his greatest effect in the well known "La donna é mobile." Signor Mendioroz, who made his first appearance as Rigoletto, has a good baritone voice, but scarcely possesses sufficient physical power to grapple with much of the music in this trying part. Madlle. Marimon has sung but seldom, owing to continued indisposition; and we can but hope that so excellent an artist may next season be able to prove to us the full amount of those powers, the brilliancy of which she has unfortunately only been enabled as yet to indicate. Of the two new comers, Signor Prudenza and Signor Bignio, both of whom made their début in "Lucia"—the former as Edgardo and the latter as Enrico—we have but few words to say. Signor Prudenza has no qualification to fit him for so important a part as the hero in Donizetti's Opera; but Signor Bignio may, we think, prove an acquisition to the company. Although stiff and formal as an actor, he has a really good voice, and throughout the Opera elicited warm and deserved applause.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The annual public concert of this Institution was given, under the conductorship of Mr. John Hullah, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on the 22nd ult., before a large audience. The object being to exhibit the most prominent talent now in the Academy, the programme was necessarily a lengthy one; but so uniformly excellent was the performance, and so interesting the specimens of composition by the students that but few persons left until nearly the conclusion. We should like to say more than our space will permit of the many clever original works given, some being far beyond the average of what may be reasonably expected even from clever pupils, and all proving that a steady and systematic course of instruction is pursued by the masters which cannot fail to produce highly satisfactory results. The "Larghetto" and "Allegro," from Mr. Shakespeare's Symphony in C minor, show that he has made good use of his time since we last heard one of his compositions in public, especially in acquiring a more intimate knowledge of instrumentation. Mr. Wingham's "Andante" and "Scherzo" from his Symphony in B flat, are not only full of clever and original thought, but scored with a breadth and freedom quite remarkable when considered as the work of a pupil. The melodious subject of the "Andante" is treated with true musical feeling; and the whole movement shows a power of continuous thought, which will doubtless ripen by experience. The "Scherzo," commencing and ending with the drums, is based upon a highly characteristic theme, the cleverness of the instrumentation materially aiding the effect. The "Allegro Moderato" from Mr. Kemp's Pianoforte Concerto in C (played with consummate skill by the composer) is also entitled to warm commendation as a well written and clearly defined movement. We must likewise award much praise to Mr. Parry's "Choral Fugue," and also to the two Part-songs—the first by Mr. Cook, "The Rainy Day," and the second by Miss G. Bairnsfather, "Wake up, sweet melody"—all of which were listened to with much interest and loudly applauded. The pianoforte performance was a most interesting feature in the concert. In the "Barcarolle" and "Rondo" from Sir Sterndale Bennett's Concerto in F minor, Miss Baglehole achieved a success as decisive as it was deserved. Her delicacy of phrasing, clearness of articulation, and firmness of touch in rapid passage playing completely took the audience by surprise; and at the end of her performance she was enthusiastically greeted and compelled to return to the front of the orchestra to curtsey her acknowledgments. A similar ovation attended Miss Channell, who played Mendelssohn's Rondo in E flat with the ease and command of an experienced artist. Miss Martin in the "Allegro" from Mozart's Concerto in C minor, Miss C. Gardner, in the "Adagio" and "Presto" from Mendelssohn's Concerto in D minor, Miss G. Bairnsfather, in the "Andante" and "Allegro" from Hiller's Concerto in F sharp minor, and Miss Waite, in the "Agitato assai," from Sir Sterndale Bennett's "Suite de Pièces," also elicited the warmest and most encouraging applause, the audience insisting that the young artists should come forward a second time to receive renewed congratulations. Another effect was created by Mr. Parker (although we imagine, from his appearance, that he should rather be styled Master Parker) in the "Andante" and "Allegro" from Spohr's "Dramatic Concerto" for the violin, his performance of which was instinct with musical feeling, as well as remarkable for a justness of intonation and a freedom of bowing quite extraordinary in one so young. It is a matter of congratulation that the organ was well represented at this concert, Mr. Fitton's execution of Bach's Grand Prelude and Fugue in A minor, and Miss K. Moultrie's performance of the "Allegretto" and "Allegro Maestoso e Vivace" from Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat (Op. 65) amply demonstrating that this important study is cultivated as it should be in a national musical institution. Miss Rebecca Jewell in Bach's air, "My heart ever faithful," and Miss Sophie Ferrari in Meyerbeer's scena from "L'Africaine," "Addio, rive del Tago," were thoroughly effective, although it may be said that both these singers have now been recognised out of the nursery in which they have been so successfully reared. Mr. Guy displayed a good tenor voice and power of declamation in Handel's "Call forth thy powers" (from "Judas Maccabæus"), Mr. Wadmore sang with much expression and intelligence "It is enough" (from "Elijah"), and Miss Mary Crawford in the duet with Mr. Parry, "Ai Capricci" (from "L'Italiana in Algeri"), proved not only that she has an excellent voice, but that her dramatic feeling is too natural to bear taming for the concert-room. Mr. Parry, too, must not be dismissed without a good word: he has a good vocal organ, and has studied how to use it with effect. The concert concluded with the Sestett, "Sola, sola" (from "Don Giovanni"), in which the services of Miss Jessie Jones and Miss Goode were enlisted, in addition to those of the vocalists already named. In the course of the first part of the concert, after a few introductory words from Sir Sterndale Bennett (Principal of the Institution) Mrs. Gladstone distributed the medals and other prizes to the students, the particulars of which are as follows:—

FEMALE DEPARTMENT.—Silver Medals: Miss Sophie Ferrari (Singing); Miss Baglehole (Pianoforte); Miss G. Bairnsfather (General Proficiency). Bronze Medals: Misses Mary Crawford, Channell, Taylor, Conolly and Whomes. Books: Misses Brand, Green, Martin, Burleigh, F. Ferrari, Goode, R. Jewell (Silver Medallist, 1868), Gardner (Silver Medallist, 1870), and Waite (Silver Medallist, 1870). Letters of Commendation: Misses Antell, Bishop, Moultrie, Salmon, Sheriff, Pocklington, Dickinson, George, Chapman, Bagnall, Hemmings and Hurley.

MALE DEPARTMENT.—Silver Medals: Mr. Parry (Composition); Mr. Cook (General Proficiency). Bronze Medals: Messrs. Faning, W. F. Parker and Ridgway. Books: Messrs. Kemp (Silver Medallist, 1857); Shakespeare (Silver Medallist, 1868); Wingham (Silver Medallist, 1870); Guy, Beazley, Douce, Docker, Howard, Wadmore, Weekes, Howell, Jones, Waddington, Walker, L. Parker and Roberts.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE eighth and last concert for the present season was given on the 3rd ult. The Symphonies were Mozart's in E flat, and Beethoven's in A (No. 7), both of which were excellently played. An important feature in the programme was the exquisitely fanciful illustrative overture of Sir Sterndale Bennett, "Paradise and the Peri," which appeared to be thoroughly appreciated by the audience. Signor Sivori's violin concerto will scarcely, we think, be enquired for again, even when the composer is there to play it. The vocalists were Madlle. Titiens (who sang in the place of Mdlle. Marimon), and Madame Trebelli-Bettini. The concert ended with Weber's "Jubilee" overture.

OPENING OF THE ORGAN AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

THE fine organ, built by Mr. Willis for the Albert Hall, was opened by Mr. W. T. Best, organist of the Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 18th ult., when a very excellent programme was provided. It would be impossible in our limited space to give anything like a description of so large and complicated an instrument, but we may say that it has four rows of keys, and upwards of two octaves of pedals. Most of the stops are of excellent quality; but when the full power of the organ is displayed, it became evident that the Hall should have a larger audience than attended this performance, so that the sound may become partially subdued. It is unnecessary to say that Mr. Best's rendering of the pieces selected was in the highest degree satisfactory; and, although in the Prelude and Fugue of Bach in E flat, (St. Ann's) we scarcely agreed with the occasional alteration of tempo, our opinion appeared in no degree shared by the audience; Handel's Organ Concerto (No. 1) and Mendelssohn's Sonata (No. 1) were finely played, the Adagio in the latter narrowly escaping an encore. A Choral Song and Fugue, on a Theme by Travers, by Dr. S. S. Wesley, an Andante Grazioso, by Mr. Hopkins, and an air with variations by Mr. H. Smart (the two last named being performed for the first time) were excellent specimens of recent works especially written for the instrument, and all of them were received with marked favour. Mr. Best also introduced two compositions of his own, a March in A minor, and an "Andante pastorale" and Fugue, in E major, both of which are thoroughly musicianlike works, the March especially being based upon a striking theme, and treated with infinite skill. Mr. Best's performance was listened to with earnest attention, and the applause at the conclusion of each piece was spontaneous and most enthusiastic.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. JOSEPH BARNBY.

On Tuesday evening, the 18th ult., the members of Mr. Joseph Barnby's Choir invited him to meet them at Exeter Hall for the purpose of presenting him with a Testimonial, as a mark of their appreciation of his unremitting exertions in training the Choir to its present state of efficiency, and also of the services he had rendered to the art by producing works hitherto almost unknown in this country. After a few introductory remarks by Mr. Gabriel Webb, Chairman of the Testimonial Committee, a written address was read by the Secretary of the Choir, Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, in which the thanks of all the members, past and present, were conveyed to their conductor for the valuable instruction they had received from him in the preparation of the many high class compositions which had been performed—allusion being especially made to Beethoven's Mass in D and Bach's "Passion Music"—and also assuring him of the great personal regard in which he was held by the Choir, and their resolution to adhere faithfully to the interests he had at heart. Mr. Barnby replied in a lengthy and highly interesting speech, which was received with the most enthusiastic applause. Mr. A. H. Littleton then proposed a vote of thanks to the Committee, which was appropriately acknowledged by Mr. Webb, and the proceedings terminated. The Testimonial consisted of a handsome Silver Claret Service, and a Purse containing 100 sovereigns. The following is a copy of the inscription on the Claret-jug:—

TO
MR. JOSEPH BARNBY,
FROM THE MEMBERS OF HIS CHOIR,
IN TESTIMONY OF THEIR PERSONAL REGARD AND IN RECOGNITION OF HIS ABILITY AND UNTIRING ZEAL
AS THEIR MUSICAL DIRECTOR,
THIS CLARET SERVICE,
TOGETHER WITH A PURSE CONTAINING ONE HUNDRED SOVEREIGNS, WAS PRESENTED
18TH JULY, 1871.

We understand that Mr. Parry, who received a silver medal for composition at the recent concert of the Royal Academy of Music, became first known at the National "Eisteddfod" at Swansea some years since, when Mr. Brinley Richards adjudged him the prize for a MS. work (which was selected from about a hundred others) so far above the average of the specimens sent in that, until it was satisfactorily authenticated, it became almost impossible to believe that it was the genuine production of a student. Mr. Parry was then residing in America; but he shortly came to England and entered the Royal Academy of Music, where he has been very successful, producing many clever compositions, and taking his degree as Bachelor of Music at Cambridge. His Welsh friends invited him to a meeting (at which many members of Parliament connected with Wales were present) to bid him farewell before his departure for America, and to congratulate him upon the honours he has so fairly won.

As so many of our contemporaries have simply stated that Mr. G. A. Macfarren's new Oratorio, "St. John the Baptist," has been withdrawn from the scheme of the forthcoming Gloucester Festival, we hasten, in justice to the composer, to place the public in possession of the facts. The Oratorio was proposed for production by Dr. Wesley, and on his recommendation it was formally accepted. The principal part in the work, however, was written for a baritone; and as only a bass singer had been engaged for the Festival, although the composer offered to alter the music for his voice, he declined to sing it, saying that nothing short of re-composition would make it suit him. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Macfarren has been entirely passive in the matter.

On Saturday, the 24th June, the last of a series of six Ballad Concerts, given by Mr. Ralph Percy, attracted a large audience at the Store Street Rooms. Miss Ellen Glanville was highly successful in all her solos, and Miss Ada Percival was also warmly received. The other vocalists were Madlle. de Villiers, Madame Lee, Messrs. Henry Parker and Chaplin Henry, Herr Otto Booth and the concert-giver, all of whom gave much satisfaction.

At a Congregation held at Cambridge, on Thursday, the 22nd June, the degree of Doctor of Music was conferred on Mr. C. Swinnerton Heap, of St. John's College, and resident of the town. The exercise—an Oratorio entitled "The Captivity," words by Goldsmith—was performed before the Vice-Chancellor.

On Friday evening, the 14th ult., the annual Choir Meeting in connection with Bayswater Wesleyan Chapel was held in the Schoolroom, the Rev. T. M. Albrighton in the chair, when a selection of sacred music was sung by the choir. The rendering of the anthems and solos appeared to give universal satisfaction; and at the close, Mr. Albrighton and the trustees and stewards, expressed their gratification at the manner in which Mr. Walter S. Brocklehurst, the organist, had trained the choir, and at the efficient way in which the services were performed in the chapel.

Mr. Lansdowne Cottell's Matinée at the Hall, Store Street, on the 19th ult., attracted a large and fashionable audience. Mdlle. Anita Leonie made a highly successful début; and Madame Barringford, a new contralto, was a valuable addition in the concerted music. The Misses Dwight, Digby Seymour, and Messrs. W. C. Bell, Ascher, and C. F. Weber also specially distinguished themselves.

Mr. G. W. Hammond's morning concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on the 8th ult., was attended by a large audience. An important item in the programme was Sir Sterndale Bennett's Sestet (Op. 8) for pianoforte, two violins, tenor, violoncello, and double bass, which was excellently played by the concert-giver, Messrs. Henry Holmes, Folkes, Burnett, Pettit and Reynolds. Mr. Hammond's solos included selections from Bach and Handel, in the performance of which he amply proved his power of interpreting classical music; and he also played Cipriani Potter's grand duet for two pianofortes (with Mr. W. H. Holmes), and Chopin's "Polonaise" for pianoforte and violoncello (in which he was ably joined by Mr. Pettit), receiving warm and well deserved applause at the conclusion of each piece. The Misses Ferrari were highly successful in the vocal music entrusted to them, and Madame Gilbert also gave several solos with much effect. Mr. Frank Holmes displayed a good baritone voice in Handel's "Honour and Arms," and Schubert's "L' Addio," and created a favourable impression upon his audience. The accompanists at the pianoforte were Messrs. Charles Gardner and Alfred Gilbert.

The fifth annual Soirée of the Trinity Choral Society, was given on the 27th June, at 15, Lower Seymour Street, Portman Square, when Mr. Barnby's Sacred Idyll "Rebekah" was performed, under the direction of the conductor, Mr. Albert Lowe. The band and chorus numbered nearly 100 performers, the soloists being Miss Sydney, Mr. Stedman and Mr. Moss. In the air "The daughters of the city come," and in the recitatives which follow, Mr. Moss displayed a voice of agreeable quality, and sang with good taste; Miss Sydney, as Rebekah, was also very successful, especially in the air, with chorus, "Fear or doubting." The part of Isaac was carefully rendered by Mr. Stedman, whose delivery of the recitative and air "The soft southern breeze," must be highly commended. The choruses on the whole went well, especially the last, "Protect them, Almighty, for ever," which was given with much precision and effect. The band exhibited occasional unsteadiness, but the entire performance reflected the highest credit on the conductor. A miscellaneous second part, including a selection from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," with Mr. Lin Rayne as reader, brought a very successful concert to a close. The hall was well filled by a fashionable audience.

The arrangements for the Gloucester Festival are now completed. Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio "St. John the Baptist" has been withdrawn, for reasons explained in our present number, and on Tuesday morning (September 5) the performance in the Cathedral will be Handel's "Dettingen Te Deum," and a selection from "Jephthah." On the same evening (also in the Cathedral) the first part of Haydn's "Creation," and a selection from "Israel in Egypt" will be given. On Wednesday morning "Elijah" will be performed; on Thursday selections from Spohr's "Calvary" and Bach's "Passion" music (St. Matthew), and Mr. Cusins's new Cantata "Gideon;" and on Friday, according to invariable custom, the "Messiah." As there will be an evening performance in the Cathedral on Tuesday, the concerts in the Shire Hall will only take place on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, when amongst other works to be given we are promised "Acis and Galatea," and selections from some of the best operas. The singers announced are Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Cora de Wilhorst, Madame Patey, Miss Martell, Messrs. Vernon Rigby, Lloyd and Bentham, Mr. Lewis Thomas and Signor Foli.

The following notice of the complimentary concert to Sir George Elvey, given at Windsor on the 5th ult., is slightly abbreviated from the Morning Post:—"The Windsor and Eton Amateur Madrigal Society at their last grand choral and orchestral concert showed their high appreciation of the great musical ability of their honorary conductor, Sir George Elvey, Mus. Doc., Oxon., by making up the whole of the programme from his works. The Sacred Cantata 'The Lord is King,' was written for the Gloucester Festival of 1853, and contains some excellent contrapuntal writing and several elegant solos for soprano, tenor and bass voices, which were given with adequate effect by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Ramsbottom, and Mr. Orlando Christian. The scoring is thoughtful and good, and the choruses broad and well written. The Anthem, 'The Lord will comfort Zion,' is only a selection from a large work composed for the Worcester Festival of 1857; but the portions selected were sufficient to show the scholarship of the composer in the most advantageous light. The contralto solo, sung by Miss Marion Severn, and the three choruses are admirable specimens of Sir George Elvey's style of treatment, and were enthusiastically received. Miss Edith Wynne and Miss Severn sang two solos from 'Mount Carmel' with artistic taste; the air, 'Mine eye runneth down,' for contralto, having a beautiful melody with an elegant clarionet obbligato part, played by Mr. Webb; and the solos from the Oratorio, 'The Resurrection and Ascension,' were brilliantly sung by Mr. Cummings. These airs are beautiful specimens of thoughtful writing, and bear evidence of the well-used skill of the musician. The "Festal march," which followed, was composed for and performed at the marriage of her Royal Highness the Princess Louise. It is bold, clever, and modern in style, and, with a vein of fresh melody running through the composition, as well for the construction as for the performance, gave great pleasure to the audience. In the Cantata composed for her Majesty's birthday, Sir George Elvey has treated the 'National Anthem' in a variety of ways, and always cleverly and effectively, as a chorale, as a fugue, and as a fantasia. There is also a well-written madrigal, 'Thro' the realm,' introduced; and although not so well sung as the other portions of the work, was still enough to show the versatility of the composer's talent. Sir George Elvey conducted the performance: there was an efficient band and chorus, the former led by Mr. Carrodus, the latter made up from members of the Society, under whose auspices the concert was given, together with some past and present pupils of Sir George Elvey. Mr. John Goss, Mr. Turle, and many other musicians testified by their presence the desire to pay a well-deserved compliment to Sir George Elvey."

The Services and Meetings of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel were held at Whitnash, on Saturday the 17th, and Sunday the 18th June. Unfortunately the weather was unfavourable, and many who wished to be present were consequently prevented. At the first meeting, on Saturday, the Rev. R. H. Baynes, vicar of St. Michael's, Coventry, preached an eloquent sermon, and the Rev. J. M. Everett, of Hereford Cathedral, intoned the service. A choir of amateurs, conducted by Miss R. Gray, performed the following service with much skill and reverence:—

Processional Hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers"	Haydn.
Venite	Walmisley.
Psalms	Purcell and Monk.
Te Deum and Jubilate	Berthold Tours.
Anthem, "Now we are Ambassadors" / "How lovely are the Messengers!"	Mendelssohn.
Hymn, "Saviour, sprinkle many nations"	Dr. Stainer.
Kyrie eleison and Creed	Berthold Tours.
Hymn, "Who are these like Stars appearing?"	W. H. Monk.
Sanctus and Gloria in excelsis	Berthold Tours.

At the luncheon, which followed, the striking and devotional service of Mr. Berthold Tours was specially commended. On Sunday two very earnest and able sermons were preached by the Rev. J. M. Everett, and £7. 17s. 4d. was collected at the offertory, raising the total amount to £14. 14s. 8d.

Il Barbiere di Siviglia. A Comic Opera in two acts Composed by Gioacchino Rossini. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

Rossini's sparkling and ever fresh work is here presented in a form so attractive as to ensure a ready acceptance with all opera frequenters who wish to possess a reliable edition which can be made equally available as a handbook and a pianoforte copy. Much credit is due to the editress for so judiciously supplying those indications of the composer's score which would be most required by amateurs desirous of following the orchestration during the performance of the opera, or of afterwards recalling to mind how the many beautiful effects which they had heard were produced. We have often, too, spoken of the excellent manner in which the original words in these editions have been rendered into English; and here, where the rapidity of much of the comic music, so admirably suited to the fluent Italian language, renders the translation additionally difficult, the merit of having so successfully fitted words to the notes deserves even more than usual recognition. Perhaps no better instance of this can be mentioned than the bustling and vivacious Cavatina, "Largo al factotum," the English of which is so admirable as to trip off the tongue with almost as much readiness as the Italian. The highly dramatic Finale to the first act may also be cited as a happy example of supplying equivalents to the original words, a task requiring not only a good linguist but a good musician.

Sing praises unto the Lord. Anthem. Composed by Ch. Gounod.

If any proof were required of the versatility of the great French musician, this Anthem would afford one.

Written in a style which must have been somewhat novel, if not altogether strange to him, he has nevertheless succeeded in producing a work which is a perfect model of its style—simple, clear, diatonic in its harmonies, broad in its effects, it is at once easy enough (technically) to be mastered by the smallest village choir, and intrinsically worthy the serious attention of the most highly trained cathedral choristers. Yet with all this, the composer has never, in the smallest degree, lost his individuality. A singular accentuation of the words here and there betray the composer's nationality, but in all other respects it could hardly be supposed that he was other than a sound English church musician. The first of the four movements into which this Anthem is divided forms a bright, cheerful chorus; exceedingly easy, and very effective. The second is a quartet or semi-chorus, "For His wrath endureth but the twinkling of an eye," chiefly noticeable as an admirable instance of smooth vocal writing. An episode, "Heaviness may endure," should not be overlooked. Nor is it likely that the succeeding phrase, 'but joy cometh in the morning," will fail in making its mark upon those who know M. Gounod's strength in depicting the tenderly devotional. Altogether this movement is amongst the choicest that have come from the pen of this composer. A short recitative for bassi, followed by a chorus, "O my God, I will give thanks," brings the Anthem to an effective conclusion. It is not difficult to predict a considerable popularity for this work amongst Choral Festivals, for which anniversaries it would appear to have been principally intended.

La Siesta. Duet. By Ch. Gounod.

This excellent duet, written to Spanish words, is we find to be speedily followed by an edition with an English translation. The figure in the accompaniment, which is obstinately carried throughout the composition, chiefly on a pedal bass, is quaint and characteristic. The theme is simple, and the two voice-parts contain no intervals which will puzzle amateurs. It is thoroughly Spanish, and like all compositions with a local colouring, will demand a certain dramatic power from both vocalists which is quite apart from the correct enunciation of notes and words. Interpreted by two sympathetic artists, the effect is certain.

Queen of Love. Song. Words from "Lyrical Poems," by Francis Turner Palgrave.

Sweet baby, sleep. Lullaby. Words by George Wither (1641), from Sir Roundell Palmer's "Book of Praise." Composed by Ch. Gounod.

The first of these songs is set to a charming melody, with a simple and graceful accompaniment, having the voice-part throughout. The theme is in E major; and, after a modulation into the dominant, a D natural, which occurs in the following phrase, has an indescribably beautiful effect. The lingering on the key-note in the last four bars whilst the accompaniment gradually resolves into the tonic harmony, may also be mentioned as a proof that M. Gounod thoroughly sympathises with the feeling of the poetry. The words of the old poet George Wither have been most tenderly treated in the second song, which is a lullaby too exquisitely melodious to have a somnolent effect upon any listener who has grown beyond cradle life. The characteristic rocking accompaniment, divided between the two hands, changes for every verse, and is always in keeping with the alteration in the character of the poetry. Amongst the many points of interest in this song we must draw attention to a highly effective chromatic progression, commencing on the words "Be still, my dear, sweet baby, sleep," the accompaniment to which is skilfully woven in with the voice part. These songs cannot fail to attain a speedy popularity both with singers and listeners, for they are thoroughly vocal, and written with an intimate knowledge of effect.

Soft, soft wind. Song. Poetry by the Rev. Canon Kingsley. Music by Cleveland Wigan.

This song must be heard two or three times over before the listener can become reconciled to the strange five-bar rhythm with which it commences. The theme is melodious, but disappoints us in halting where we least expect it. The several closes on the tonic harmony, too, give it somewhat an air of patchiness. We are inclined, however, to believe that Mr. Wigan has feeling for vocal music, and shall be glad to meet with him again in a song with a more flowing subject.

Gavotte, en Ut mineur, for the Pianoforte.
Mazurka, en Sol mineur, for the Pianoforte.
Par Camille Saint-Saëns.

It is satisfactory to find that we are not only re-producing many of the best specimens of the old and solid school of writing, but actually publishing pieces by modern composers which reflect the spirit of an age when, instead of music being adapted to the performers, the performers were compelled to adapt themselves to the music. Such compositions as these will be of the utmost service in cultivating the minds and fingers of pianoforte students; and every teacher should do all in his power to spread a love for such works, as a preliminary step towards forming the taste for the appreciation of the more important compositions of the great masters. The Gavotte before us is not only a well-written piece, but is attractive enough in subject to please every listener. It is so quaint and full of character that it scarcely appears of modern construction, the greatest compliment perhaps that we can pay to a composition professedly representative of a stately dance which has now passed away. Much freshness is obtained by the transition to the tonic major, the new theme being thoroughly in keeping with the rest of the movement; and a good effect is gained by a key-note and dominant pedal. The second piece has no fantastic title, but is simply announced as a "Mazurka en Sol mineur." There is much originality in the leading subject of this Mazurka, and a player must carefully study the touches indicated by the composer in order to give it due effect. The wide skips give an eccentric character to the composition, but the passages will be found to lie well under the hand of a trained pianist. We commend both these pieces to the attention of all who wish for something a little out of the beaten track.

The Anglers. Part-song.
Jäger Chorus. Part-song.
Composed by W. W. Pearson.

The first and least ambitious of these Part-songs has a quiet, flowing melody, smoothly harmonised, a certain amount of contrast of character being obtained towards the end, by the tenors and basses reiterating the "click-a clack" of the mill to six quavers in the bar, against the legato theme sustained by the Sopranos and Altos. The "Jäger Chorus" is said to be "an invocation to the Demon Huntsman of the Hartz Mountains;" and, although it unquestionably contains many points of interest, the constant pauses and changes of key produce a feeling of restlessness, which will, we think, prevent the due appreciation of much that is really good in the composition. There is decided freshness in the melody after the double bar, commencing with the bass solo; and the lengthening out of the words "Awake, awake," with the pause upon the dominant seventh before the repeat, has a good effect. We think that the opening portion of this part-song might be re-considered by the composer with advantage.

Sweet echo. Part-song. Words by Moore.
O tranquil eve. Part-song. Words by James Hine, M.A.
Cheerily, cheerily. Part-song. Words by Barry Cornwall.
Composed by Alexander S. Cooper.

Choirs especially devoted to the interpretation of part-songs need never stand still for want of material, for so many of these compositions are issued in the present day, and at so low a price, that the wonder is how the demand can keep pace with the supply sufficiently to remunerate either composer or publisher. Mr. Cooper has contributed three songs which are likely, we think, to become popular. No. 1, "Sweet echo," is to our mind the best of the three. The subject, alternating between the Sopranos and Altos, and Tenors and Basses, is somewhat novel, and is treated throughout with due regard to the meaning of the words, the echo being rather delicately hinted at in the music than coarsely expressed. No. 2 has a tranquil theme, carefully harmonised, the modulations being in good keeping with the poetry, and always appearing rather to grow-up naturally than to be forced in to create effect. We should imagine that this song, which in the edition before us is in C, would be more agreeable in the original key, D flat, for the voices in many parts appear rather too low. No. 3, in A minor and major, commences with the Tenors and Altos in unison, the other voices joining in afterwards for six bars: this is succeeded by a short phrase for Tenors and Basses, closing upon the dominant, which introduces the tonic major for the first time, a bright theme being given to the burthen of the song, "Cheerily, cheerily." The return to the minor is effective; and the difference of treatment in the second verse prevents any undue monotony. As may be gathered from our notice, we think highly of all these songs; but we prefer the first, as being the most original.

A Collection of Organ Pieces. Composed for Church use by W. T. Best.

The reproach which used to be levelled against English organists and composers with so much justice and force, viz., that organ music was never played by the one or produced by the other, must ere this have lost its point utterly. They do both the one and the other in a manner not surpassed by the musicians of any other country. When, therefore, an organist of the eminence of Mr. Best writes pieces for the instrument upon which he is everywhere admitted to be an unrivalled performer, it is natural to suppose that much that is of value in the way of combination of stops and general effectiveness may be found in them, to say nothing of the higher qualities of composition. It is not stating too much to say that, as compositions alone, these organ pieces must rank very high; and taken in conjunction with the before-mentioned qualifications, they are valuable to the organ student in the highest degree. The great variety in this collection may be gathered from the fact that it includes Andantes, Allegros, Adagios, Largos, Preludes, Postludes, Pastorales, Marches for Church Festivals, Weddings and Funerals—in short, almost every class of piece, from the Allegro giojoso to the Adagio elegiaco; and in all this there is a freedom and wealth of invention that is perfectly astonishing in its profusion. Perhaps the book which contains the greatest amount of inspiration is No. 5, consisting of six organ pieces for Christmas, written upon Latin texts, "Sit laus plena, sit sonora," "Quem vidistis, Pastores," etc. Some of these movements are perfect gems, especially those of a pastoral character. But the most marked characteristic of the whole is the healthy and vigorous musicianship everywhere observable. It must have been a difficult matter for Mr. Best to bring himself to compose pieces of a comparatively easy nature, for hitherto he has been only too remarkable for the production of works which, in their enormous difficulty, were worthy companions to those which Thalberg wrote for the sister instrument. In the present series, however, there is nothing that may not be easily conquered by an organist of moderate powers in a short time, and it is certain there is nothing that could possibly fail in interesting those who desire good healthy masculine music.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

Capriccio for the Pianoforte. By Westley Richards.

This is good and well considered music, which deserves to be known by all who wish to promote a return to a more healthy class of composition than that to which we have been lately accustomed. The subjects are good and carefully developed, and the passages brilliant and effective, without being unduly difficult of execution. Mr. Richards should persevere in a style for which he has evident talent.

A voiceless sigh. Song. Poetry by Sir Ferlagh O'Brien (16th century). Composed by Charles Salaman.

Some very charming words set with that poetical feeling which we invariably find in Mr. Salaman's vocal music. The melody is really beautiful; and any singer who can successfully catch the true intention of the composer may make this song highly effective with a refined audience. The harmonies and accompaniments are written throughout with the delicacy of a true artist.

Cramer, Wood and Co.

Danse aux Flambeaux; air favori de Roi Louis XIV. (1654) pour Piano.

Le Tocsin. Caprice-Galop, pour Piano.

Par A. Lebeau.

Theme is much character in the theme taken for the first of these pieces; but, considering the simple nature of the arrangement, it seems strange that M. Lebeau should think it worthy of being ranked as "Op. 121" amongst his works. It is sufficiently well treated to warrant us in recommending it to any young player who has dramatic feeling enough to perform it as it is marked —"All^to. all' antico." The second composition is a spirited Galop, with just enough of the "tocsin" to justify its title. The principal theme is full of vivacity, and the modulations give much freshness to the piece. We see no more reason, however, why this should be a "Caprice-Galop" than any other of the multitude of similar trifles which are constantly brought before us.

Rippling waves. Caprice for the Pianoforte. Composed by James M. Wehli.

We have nothing whatever to say against this piece as a specimen of modern "descriptive music." A series of arpeggios, with a graceful melody at the top, has as much right to be called "Rippling waves" as anything else in nature which has a gentle, monotonous motion; but we think that aquatic music has been a trifle overdone. Rivers, cascades, fountains, and indeed all kinds of forms which water assumes, have been so thoroughly used up by pianoforte writers, that we can scarcely hope for anything with the slightest novelty of construction until some composer discovers an entirely unworked subject to rhapsodise upon, or—better still—until he produces a piece which, like the works of the old writers, shall need no words to describe it. The sketch before us is in every respect as good as most of the compositions intended rather for the fingers than the mind; and we commend it to the attention of all who are in search of the latest examples of pieces cut to the fashion of the time.

The Reindeer Bells. Song. Words by Frederick Enoch. Music by Henry Smart.

This is one of the most graceful and musicianlike settings of some highly dramatic words that we have seen for some time, even from the pen of the accomplished composer whose name appears on the title-page. The melody is throughout so thoroughly descriptive of the poetry that it appears as if one mind must have produced both. Much effect is got by the alternation between major and minor; and the conclusion, where the weary traveller returns to his expectant wife, is really beautiful. Vocalists will, we are certain, thank us for calling their attention to a song of such intrinsic excellence.

Peace! It is I. Sacred Song. Written by the Rev. J. M. Neale, D.D. The music composed by J. P. Knight.

The effect of this song is marred by a heavy accompaniment of chords, which is continued without cessation throughout. The melody, in $\frac{6}{4}$ rhythm, moves in excellent sympathy with the poetry, and the harmonies are appropriate and carefully written, but the words in many parts suggest some more varied treatment than the composer has given us.

Joseph Williams.

Sunshine. Morceau de Salon pour Piano, par H. B. Ellis.

Why a piece having the English word "Sunshine" for its title should be called a "Morceau de Salon, par H. B. Ellis," it puzzles us to discover; but the music is truly British (at least, as our fashionable native composers have latterly represented the nation) if we except a reminiscence of Schumann's "Arabesque" in the theme after the double bar, on page 2. Mr. Ellis writes freely, however, and the passages are generally effective. There is no reason why "Sunshine" should not be admitted into our drawing-rooms as well as many other specimens of what may be called "weather music."

William Czerny.

Six characteristic Pieces for the Piano, for small hands. Composed by Oscar Beringer.

These six trifles, moulded on the plan set by Schumann in his "Kinderscenen" are well written, and will be found extremely useful for young players. Although carefully adapted for small hands, they are by no means easy, being obviously the composition of one who has trained himself in the German school, where close playing with the two hands, even in juvenile music, is the rule rather than the exception. This style is especially observable in No. 3, "Garlands of flowers," and also in many portions of the other pieces, some of which however are perhaps a little too restless for sketches of such slight pretension. No. 1, "Soldier's March," has a good bold subject, and a second melodious theme, in the subdominant; but we much prefer "Amy's little song," No. 2, which is exceedingly pleasing, and contains some effective modulations. We have already spoken of "Garlands of flowers," which, apart from its attractiveness as a piece, will form a good exercise for the fingers of both hands. No. 4, "The Young Uhlan," has scarcely a sufficiently pleasing subject to interest juvenile students; but No. 5, "In the swing," can hardly fail to become a favourite. The monotonous motion suggested by the title is happily carried out, and the theme in the relative minor is highly effective. No. 6, "A village holiday," with its pedal bass, is somewhat conventional, but it is full of character; children, however, will be puzzled to know exactly the meaning of the direction at the commencement, "Burlesque et f."

Three Musical Sketches for the Piano. Composed by Bennett Gilbert.

We have copied the title of Mr. Gilbert's pieces; but as No. 2, "Hunting Song," alone has reached us, we have only to express a hope that the other two are as good as the one before us. Of course, having reference to the hunting field, the conventional horn passages are to be found plentifully scattered throughout the composition; but the subject, in A major, is fresh and melodious, and although reminding us in parts of the well-known pianoforte lied of Mendelssohn in the same key, we can conscientiously recommend it on its own merits. Nos. 1 and 3—"Spring's greeting" and "A winter's tale"—are no doubt intended by the composer as contrasts to the one we have noticed, and we think should scarcely be separated from it in performance.

Brewer and Co.

Gems from Handel's Italian Operas. Transcribed from the full scores for the pianoforte. No. 1, "Mi Lusinga il dolce affetto."

Handel's Songs, arranged from the full scores for the organ. No. 1, "Lord, remember David," No. 2, "O Lord, whom we adore."

By J. H. Deane.

Handel's Italian operas are indeed but little known in the present day; and yet whenever a song from these almost forgotten works happens to be disinterred it rarely fails to take its place with the lovers of really sterling music. The song from the opera of "Alcina," which has been ably and unassumingly transcribed by Mr. Deane, has such a lovely flowing melody that we cannot but wonder how it is that such compositions are allowed to fall into oblivion. The two songs, which are arranged for the organ, are excellent specimens of the composer's sacred vocal pieces. The first, Mr. Deane tells us in a foot-note, is "arranged from Handel's own score of Sosarmes, from which the air known as 'Lord, remember David' was adapted by Dr. Arnold in 1786." The second, from the Oratorio "Athalia" (another work but rarely heard) needs no eulogy on our part as a composition, and we have therefore merely to record that Mr. Deane has performed his task with a reverence which does him infinite credit, and which we should like to see more general amongst the transcribers of classical works.

Weekes and Co.

A Wild March-day. Bass song. The poetry by Coombes Davies. Music by Alfred J. Sutton.

Descriptive songs should be very good to be endurable. Mild melodies, with accompaniments to match, may pass in a crowd, and even create a certain amount of effect if well sung, but composers should well consider the matter before they attempt to excite a dramatic interest; for "sensation music," like "sensation dramas," must be either a great success or an ignoble failure. Mr. Sutton's "March-day," can scarcely be called "wild:" it is indeed too uniform to express the subject, the scales and chromatic passages being made to do duty whenever the gusty weather is mentioned with as much regularity as the machinery is brought into action in a theatrical storm. The best part of the song is after the double bar, where the quiet melody steals in, to the words "Spring is come, and flowers are glowing"; but even here the modulations give a restless effect to the voice-part hardly in accordance with the feeling of the poetry. There is much dramatic power shown in various portions of the song; but, as a whole, the composition is unsatisfactory because it is not spontaneous.

Three Songs. Words (by permission) from "The Christian Year." Music by Jane Mayo.

If these songs were not so overladen with harmonies and accompaniments we should have much more to say in their favour. No. 1, "Nightingale's Song," is more free from this fault than the other two, but the composer evidently experiences a difficulty in allowing the voice to speak for itself. In the third and two succeeding bars on page 3, we at first could not clearly comprehend what was intended, but we perceive, by the next verse, that all the dotted quavers followed by semiquavers should be dotted semiquavers, followed by demisemiquavers, a mistake which ought to be remedied as soon as possible. No. 2, "Lessons sweet of Spring returning," has a pleasing melody, well accompanied in parts, but like the other songs, it wants quiescence. It is true that the words "Soft as Memnon's harp at morning," would make eighteen composers out of twenty break out into passages: but strength is shown in resisting temptation. No. 3, "To the Redbreast," is a well written song, but here again the voice is too much distressed, this time in the form of the twittering of birds. When will composers learn that it is the feeling of the poetry that should be musically illustrated, and not the mere words?

Original Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Musical Times.

Sir,—To obtain the degree of Mus. Bac. in Dublin, the candidate must pass an examination (1) in general Literature, as a test (I imagine) of his having received a tolerably liberal education, (2) in the Theory and Grammar of Music, and in Thorough Bass. He must also compose a piece of Vocal Music, of which a portion at least must be in five real parts, with accompaniment for stringed band or organ, and will be required to write "ex tempore" a piece of counterpoint on a proposed subject.

For Mus. Doc. the candidate (who is already Mus. Bac.) must write a portion at least of his composition in six or eight real parts, with accompaniment for full band. The examination is more searching than, and differs in some essential parts from, that for Mus. Bac.

These, so far as I recollect, are the main features connected with the degrees. Full information, however, as to fees, subjects of general examination, &c., is given in the University Calendar, and there is, I believe, published a short syllabus of the requirements for musical degrees, apart from the Calendar, both of which may be obtained from Messrs. Hodges, Foster and Co., 104, Grafton Street, Dublin; or from Longmans, London. Some graduate of Oxford or Cambridge would, no doubt, be able to inform your correspondent as to the proceedings in those Universities.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
14th July, 1871. B.A., T.C.D.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

J. H.—Our correspondent's letter has evidently already appeared in another journal, and we cannot therefore insert it as an original communication.

H. Barber.—For the information of our correspondent, and many others who continually send us their early attempts at composition, we once more announce that we do not review manuscript works.

Cambrian and others who have written to us under assumed names and initials, are informed that unless their communications are authenticated by the enclosure of their cards, no notice can be taken of their letters.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Adelaide.—The performance of Romberg's Lay of the Bell, and Handel's Acis and Galatea, by the Philharmonic Society was a decided success. The principal parts in the first-named work were taken by Mrs. G. T. Harris, Messrs. W. Dyer, T. W. Ingram and G. C. Smith; and in the second by Miss Vaughan, Messrs. F. Searle, J. S. Brookes and L. Grayson; all of whom were thoroughly efficient. The choruses on the whole were exceedingly well rendered. Mr. E. Spiller acted as conductor, Mr. B. B. White, R.A.M., as leader, and Mr. James Shakespeare presided at the pianoforte. The band consisted of about twenty performers, and the chorus numbered between ninety and a hundred vocalists.

Bedford.—The concert given at the Assembly Rooms on the 22nd June, for the purpose of exhibiting the progress of Mr. P. H. Diemer's pupils on the system of combined, instead of individual, practice on the pianoforte, is stated by the local press to have been highly successful. The programme included Wagner's March from Tannhäuser, Beethoven's Symphony in D (No. 2), and Weber's "Jubilee" Overture, arranged for ten performers on five pianofortes (the first named piece having the addition of a harmonium), besides other works in which the performers were similarly multiplied. Miss Sophie Ferrari won enthusiastic applause in all her vocal solos, and Mr. Clementi (violin) was an excellent substitute for Mr. Blagrove, who was indisposed.

Birmingham.—During the short stay of the Emperor and Empress of Brazil they paid a visit to the Town Hall, where Dr. C. Swinnerton Heap, in the absence of Mr. Stimpson, played a selection of music on the organ. His Majesty expressed great pleasure at the performance; and, at his request, Dr. Heap had the honour of being presented to him, and of receiving his congratulations on the manner in which he had acquitted himself.

Brentwood.—On Tuesday evening, the 27th June, a concert was given at the schools of Christ Church, Great Warley, Brentwood (in aid of funds for their enlargement), by the choir, assisted by a few friends. The soprano solos were most successfully sung by Miss Edith Blair; and Mr. C. H. Unwin (Tenor) and Col. Moncrieff (Bass) also elicited much applause. Mr. Geo. Brace's violin playing was a prominent feature in the evening's performance. Several part-songs and glees were given by the choir with excellent precision and effect. Mr. T. H. Bunbury, the organist, conducted and accompanied.

Derby.—The organ recently erected in the new and beautiful church, St. Luke (which was consecrated on the 24th June last), has given the greatest satisfaction to all who have heard it. It is built by Abbott, of Leeds, and is a portion only of the permanent instrument; but its power and quality of tone has rarely been surpassed.

Jersey.—We understand that a new dramatic Oratorio entitled Solomon's Temple, in three parts, the music composed by H. F. Standhaft, and the text by T. Dorn, is in course of completion, and is expected to be publicly rehearsed some time this summer, when all the available talent in the island will be invited to co-operate in its performance.

Melbourne.—Mr. C. E. Horsley's Farewell Concert on the 13th May, at the Town Hall was attended by a large audience. The programme, besides containing an excellent selection from the works of Weber, Mendelssohn, Bishop, Gounod, Verdi, &c., included several extracts from Mr. Horsley's own compositions, The South Sea Sisters, Comus, and Euterpe. The vocalists were Miss Lucy Chambers, Mrs. Fox, Messrs. Rainford, Beaumont, Hallam, and Signor Dondi, all of whom were highly successful in the music allotted to them. Mr. Horsley's works were received with the utmost favour (the Corroboree chorus, from The South Sea Sisters, being enthusiastically encored), and on leaving the rostrum, the composer was cheered again and again as he bowed his final adieux to the audience.

Norbury.—On Sunday, the 25th June, a new organ was opened at the church in Hazel Grove, by Mr. H. Collier, of Stockport, who played an excellent selection of music from the compositions of the best masters, in his usually efficient manner. The instrument was built by Mr. T. W. Jardine, of Manchester, and reflects the highest credit upon his abilities. The musical portion of the service was performed by the choir of St. Peter's Church, Stockport—Joule's Choral Service, Dr. Clarke Whitfeld's Service in E, and Dr. Spark's Anthems, "All we like sheep have gone astray," and "I shall see Him, but not now," being chosen for the occasion.

Portsmouth.—The first concert of the Choral Society under the direction of the new conductor, Mr. J. Winterbottom, was given on the 18th ult., with much success. The first part of the programme was devoted to Rossini's Stabat Mater, the solos in which were sung with excellent effect by Miss Soña Vinta, Miss Dondney, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The second part was miscellaneous, and included several part-songs, all of which were remarkably well given by the choir. The band and chorus numbered 100 performers. Mr. Saxey presided at the harmonium in the first part, and at the pianoforte in the secular portion, Mr. J. Winterbottom conducting the Stabat Mater with much skill and judgment.

Reigate.—On Thursday, the 29th June, a concert was given by Herr Albert Pieckzonka, at the Public Hall, assisted by Madame Leonie de Vattelette (Professor of the Harp from the Conservatoire, Paris), Miss Fanny Poole and Signor Tessemans Burleigh. The principal feature in the programme was the pianoforte performance of the concert-giver, which included Weber's Concertstück, an effective arrangement of the "Watch on the Rhine," pieces by Chopin and Heller, Liszt's Fantasia on Lucia, and a Polonaise of his own composition, all of which were given with good executive power and musical feeling. Madame de Vattelette's harp playing was also thoroughly appreciated, her most effective piece being the "Danse des Sylphes" of Godefroid. Miss Fanny Poole and Signor Burleigh's songs were well rendered and much applauded, and the concert was in every respect highly successful.

Rhyl, North Wales.—A very successful concert was given in the Town Hall, on the 20th June, by the Amateur Musical Society, better known in Wales as Mr. Ambrose Lloyd's choir. The first part consisted of a miscellaneous selection, and the second part of Mr John Thomas's Welsh Wedding Scene, The Bride of Neath Valley. In the first part Miss Morris rendered very efficient service in some Welsh songs, and Miss Louisa Hughes, a very promising young contralto, sang Linley's "Come hither, pretty Fairy," and the solo in Brinley Richards' "We are Nymphs of the Ocean Spray." Miss Francis possesses an extraordinary compass of voice, and on this occasion she sang two duets for soprano and tenor, the transition from the one voice to the other being most remarkable. Miss Lloyd, Mr. Lewis and Miss Morris were also highly effective. The performance of the Wedding Scene was a great success; the characters being represented by Miss Brown as the Bride, Miss Lloyd as the Bride's mother, Mr. Proffit as the Bridegroom, and Mr. Robert Hughes as the Bridal Messenger. The Overture and first Intermezzo were exceedingly well performed by Misses Hughes and Marian Brown, and the second Intermezzo and dance music by Misses Francis and Lloyd. The want of an organ in the church scene was well supplied by a powerful pedal harmonium, at which Mr. W. E. Hardeman most efficiently presided

The consecutive performance of the piece was only secured in several instances by the determination of the conductor, Mr. Lloyd, to resist all encores. The hall was crowded in every part.

Stockport.—The half-yearly meeting of the Stockport Choral Society was held on Tuesday evening, the 27th June, under the presidency of Major Wilkinson. After the business had been disposed of, the chairman, on behalf of the members, presented to Mr. Councillor James Whitaker, (who has recently resigned the office of Honorary Secretary) a framed address, written on vellum; a handsome writing desk, silver inkstand, and gold pen and pencil case, in appreciation of his gratuitous services during the past twelve years. Mr. Whitaker, in responding, thanked the members for their handsome recognition of his humble services, and assured them that whilst always remembering their kindness he should never cease to take the deepest interest in the welfare of the Society.

Taunton.—The usual entertainment previous to the holidays was given at the West of England Dissenters' Collegiate Institution on Wednesday, the 21st June, before a large audience. The programme was well selected from the works of the best masters; and the general execution of the pieces was exceedingly good. The choruses were given with much precision and energy; and amongst the sacred solos may be particularly mentioned "My song shall be of mercy," by Master R. Allen, and "Now heaven in fullest glory," by Mr. Loveday. In the secular part Master D. Johnstone deservedly received an encore for his excellent rendering of the song, "Once more, good night," a compliment also awarded for the duet, "Love and War," sung by Mr. Loveday and Master D. Johnstone. A duet and solo for the pianoforte (the first performed by Masters L. Rowe and E Fuller, and the second by Master L. Rowe) were received with rapturous applause, and some part-songs formed a prominent feature in the programme. Mr. Comer, who conducted, had every reason to congratulate himself upon the success of his pupils.

Tynemouth, Northumberland.—The new organ built for the Tynemouth Congregational Church by Messrs. Nicholson and Son, of Newcastle, was formally opened on Wednesday the 12th ult., with a performance in the afternoon by Mr. John Nicholson, organist of the Abbey Church, Hexham, and in the evening with a selection of choruses and solos from the Oratorios, ably rendered by a choir comprising most of the leading church singers of Newcastle. A gallery has been recently erected at the north end of the church for the reception of the instrument, which is divided into two parts, in order not to hide the large Gothic window, the Great and Swell being on one side, and the pedal organ on the other, with seats in the intermediate space for the choir. The verdict of the audience (which included several local organists) was in every respect exceedingly favourable.

Weybridge.—The sixth annual Choral Festival was held on Thursday the 6th ult. At the early service, which opened with a beautiful hymn from the St. Alban's Tune Book, Nares' Kyrie in F and a Sanctus from Orlando Gibbons were used. The choristers taking part in it afterwards adjourned to a neighbouring field and partook of breakfast; then putting on their surplices each choir, preceded by its respective banner, entered the church singing a processional hymn. The clergy headed the procession, and were for the most part seated in the chancel. The first portion of the service was intoned by the Rev. P. Bartlett. The responses, &c., were sung to music, composed (we believe) by Dr. Hayne. The Venite, Morning Psalms, &c., were sung to Anglican Chants by Yates, Joule, Barnby, and Crotch. The Te Deum to music by Dr. Medley, J. S. B. Joule, &c. An Anthem, "I was glad when they said unto me," taken from Psalm 122, 1st, 5th, 6th, and 7th verses, and set to music by Sir G. J. Elvey, was sung at the service. This admirable composition contains passages of great pathos and beauty, one of which, a semi-chorus, "O pray for the peace of Jerusalem," a slow and measured movement, sung softly, may be adduced as an instance. The 150th Psalm was sung to a chant by Hackett, when the clergy retired; and as the choirs left the church, a voluntary, "Worthy the Lamb," was played by Mr. Sangster. A cold repast was served in the National School Room, in which hung the banners of the several choirs. The Doxology was sung as a grace to the Old Hundredth tune. The Rev. J. N. Spicer then made a few remarks expressing regret at the absence of the Byfleet choir, and proposed a vote of thanks to all engaged in managing the business in hand. At 4.30 the afternoon service commenced, the choirs entering as in the morning. In the course of this service Gregorian Tones were used for the Psalms, and the Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis were sung to Parisian Tones, as arranged by Stainer. The Anthem selected for afternoon service was taken from Psalm 25, "O praise the Lord," set to music by Mr. Sangster. It contains, in addition to other fine passages, an excellent duet, so arranged that trebles sing the leading part, and the tenors and basses united sing the other, thus producing a striking effect. Mr. Sangster conducted with his usual skill and ability, and Mr. Burrowes very effectively managed the instrumental portions of the service. At the conclusion of evening prayer the Rev. E. J. Rose delivered a short address, reviewing the work done by the Association during its existence, and inviting contributions towards the expenses incurred in the good work it had taken in hand. The total amount of the collections at the three services was £27. 7s. The Overture to Samson was played by Mr. Sangster, while the choirs were retiring after the afternoon service. At each service there was a large congregation.

VESPER CANTICLES. New, simple, and effective Settings. Six numbers ready, price 1d. each. By J. M. Bentley. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

T. SIMPSON'S TE DEUM, in C, and BENEDICITE OMNIA OPERA, in F, in unbarred chant form. Price 4d. Clergymen and Choirmasters will find this Te Deum well adapted for boy Choirs, as it does not range above E, and it may soon be made congregational. It is equally adapted for all choirs.

"... Of late years, however, various settings of the Canticles have been made under the name of "Chant Services."..... they should rather be called "Choral Recitative," for each strain is usually different, and often the effects are quite elaborate. Mr. Simpson's Chant Service is of this type, but it is very good of its kind, and we must rank it with the works of the "Cathedral" school. The Te Deum opens with some bold unison phrases for the voices, well accompanied with chords on the Organ: then, at the appropriate places, the voices proceed in harmony with good effect, the unison being resumed from time to time, as required. The setting of the Benedicite is equally spirited and much to our taste: in short, we consider this work well worthy of a place in all parish choirs."—Choir.

"There are many good points in Mr. Simpson's 'Service' (it is not, however, a complete service,) and we find very little to object to."—Dr. Fowle's Musical Journal.

"Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., have issued eight songs by Joseph Barnby, the words taken from a variety of sources. 'My Golden Ship,' with its frequent employment of a double pedal, its use of syncopation, and general form of expression is a reminder of M. Gounod. None the less, however, does the music demand praise as an effective setting of the words. By the way, there is an example of the hidden fifth in the last cadence of each verse, which Mr. Barnby may have intended, but against which the ear protests. 'The Wrecked Hope' has become more or less familiar by the singing of Mdlle. Drasdil; and therefore we need only endorse here a verdict of approval awarded by the public voice. As a simple setting of a simple rhyme its merits are great. 'The Rainy Day,' in which Mr. Barnby seeks to illustrate Longfellow's familiar words, hardly attains a like degree of success. Its cleverness cannot be disputed, but a less striking display of harmonic colour would have served the turn of verses which are forcible enough in themselves. Then we must entirely object to the pedal cadence at the end of the song as being out of character, and only suggestive of the prolongation of a 'voluntary' while the clergyman finishes his private prayers. 'The Rose and the Nightingale' affords another example of Mr. Barnby's skill, and scarcely less of his poetic feeling; but it also goes, with much else from his pen, to show that he has a tendency towards writing in what we account a forced and unnatural style. As regards incessant chromatics and restless tonality, this song looks like an example of Spohr when most Spohrish. Enharmonic progressions, double flats, and all the tools of the German master's craft are very good things in their way, but they should be sparingly used. In 'I sit alone' Mr. Barnby is far more natural, and correspondingly more successful. He gives eloquent, because unaffected, expression to his theme, and the result is a song capable of pleasing learned and unlearned in an equal degree. These remarks apply also to 'In Spring Time,' a little unsophisticated idyll, which might have been improvised by some rustic Phyllis, in the days when country maidens had the gift of melody, and shepherds trilled the oaten reed. Passing 'How fades the Light,' as presenting nothing worthy of special remark, we come to 'Forget me not,' the last of the set. In point of melody this song is charming, nor can much objection be made to the accompaniment, though Mr. Barnby has again used that quickly fatiguing and very cheap device—the double pedal. Here, however, as in most of the songs preceding, we observe a creditable desire to avoid the beaten track of English composers generally. That Mr. Barnby is not always fortunate in carrying out his purpose supplies no reason at all why the existence of his purpose should fail to obtain recognition and applause."—Daily Telegraph, July 24, 1871.

ANTHEMS.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. beg to announce that they are now issuing in the octavo form, a series of Anthems by the greatest Modern Composers, principally selected from their extensive Catalogue, and also including new works of undoubted merit. The preference shown by the musical public for small Scores over the separate vocal parts, has been so marked as to warrant the publishers in anticipating a more than usually large circulation for the Edition.

The issue commenced with the new year, and will be continued in Weekly Numbers, at Twopence, Threepence, Fourpence or Sixpence each, according to their length.

Twenty-six Numbers will form a Volume, which will be published half-yearly.

Many of the best known and most favourite Anthems which have hitherto been only obtainable in the large and comparatively expensive Folio size, will thus be brought within the reach of all.

It is also intended to include in this series, Anthems by Ancient Composers, but these will always be issued in twenty-six consecutive numbers, so as to form a separate Volume.

The following Anthems are now in course of publication:—

Sacred Songs

FOR LITTLE SINGERS.

WORDS BY

FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL,

MUSIC COMPOSED AND ARRANGED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

ILLUSTRATED BY THE BROTHERS DALZIEL.

Elegantly bound in cloth, gilt edges, price 6s. 6d.

"Little singers and their teachers will rejoice greatly over this admirably conceived and executed collection of twelve songs. The object has been to provide these small folk with vocal music, words and notes of which shall be alike pure, and which shall be, as regards compass and style generally within the ordinary standard of their capacity. These conditions have been entirely fulfilled, and our young friends may be safely entrusted with this little book, which contains no word that should be unsaid, but is full of sweet, happy thoughts. The religious tone which pervades it is not of the canting order, but will have the effect of implanting a love for the beauties of nature and of Christianity. The music is equally healthy, and, while never soaring high, abounds in grace and devotional feeling. Mr. Randegger has been solicitous about the capabilities of those for whom he has here written, and his phraseology is perfectly simple, his accompaniments easy, and his demand upon compass exceedingly moderate—never exceeding E fourth space, nor C first line below. The subjects of this dozen songs are respectively 'Flowers,' 'Sunday,' 'Evening prayer,' 'Stars,' 'My little tree,' 'Thy kingdom come,' 'The moon,' 'Jessie's friend,' 'The bower,' 'Fruit,' 'The dying sister,' and 'The angel's song.' The merit of these is so equal that we can hardly say which are our particular favourites. Perhaps 'Flowers,' 'Jessie's friend,' and 'The angel's song' are those we shall longest remember; the first is quite gay, the second full of tender sweetness, and the last has a breadth and dignity quite remarkable, considering the limited means employed. We must not omit to name the service a sister art has contributed towards the general attractiveness of this little volume; the pictorial designs and their engraving on wood being of the very best, and illustrating the subjects of the several songs in the happiest manner."—The Queen, Oct. 22, 1870.

INSTRUCTION BOOKS FOR THE ORGAN.

W. T. BEST.

The Art of Organ Playing, (Part I.) Practically Illustrated from the first rudiments to the highest difficulties of the Instrument; both in its use as an Accompaniment to the different styles of Church Music, as well as in the various purposes of the employment of the Organ as a Solo Instrument. Price 6s.

The Art of Organ Playing. Part II., price 12s., being Studies for the Pedal, with many illustrations from the works of Bach, and other Organ Composers; shewing how passages of special difficulty are to be played.

The first part of "The Art of Organ Playing" dealt merely with those peculiarities of Touch and Fingering in which the mode of performance on the keyboard of an Organ differs from that of a Pianoforte; but the characteristic of Organ music is, that it demands the simultaneous use of both Hands and Feet; a matter involving a different employment of the Left Hand, which does not play the Bass, as in Pianoforte music, except where the Pedal part ceases for the moment. A proper manner of playing all those passages assigned to the Pedal is as important a study, in its way, as a correct method of Fingering, as applied to a keyed instrument. The present exercises have specially in view that opposed motion of the Left Hand to the Pedal part, which constitutes one of the principal difficulties to be overcome by an Organ-player; as the practice of mere passages for the Pedals, unaccompanied by the use of the Hands, will never enable a student to obtain the requisite facility. The manner of combining the various stops, and employing the different key-boards of an Organ is also taught throughout the work, each study having directions for the use of those registers which are calculated to give it the best effect.

For Contents see Novello's Catalogue, No. 1 and 2, which may be had gratis, or post-free for two stamps.

100	As a beam o'er the face of the waters
125	Avenging and bright
111	Believe me, if all those endearing young charms
123	By that lake, whose gloomy shore
133	Come o'er the sea
138	Come, rest on this bosom
140	Dear Harp of my country
92	Erin! the tear and the smile in thine eyes
103	Eveleen's bower
132	Farewell, but whenever you welcome the hour
91	Go where glory waits thee
135	Has sorrow thy young days shaded?
104	How dear to me the hour
106	How oft has the Benshee cried!
139	I'd mourn the hopes that leave me
122	I saw thy form in youthful prime
117	It is not the tear, at this moment shed
115	Lesbia hath a beaming eye
108	Let Erin remember the days of old
119	Love's young dream
124	Nay, tell me not, dear
112	Night clos'd around
134	No, not more welcome
93	Oh! breathe not his name
97	Oh! think not my spirits are always as light
101	Oh! haste and leave this sacred isle
119	Oh! the days are gone, when beauty bright
126	Oh! the Shamrock (Thro' Erin's isle)
127	Oh! had we some bright little isle of our own
137	Oh! where's the slave?
131	One bumper at parting
94	Remember the glories of Brien the brave
98	Rich and rare were the gems she wore
121	She is far from the land
107	Silent, oh Moyle! be the roar of thy water
101	St. Senanus and the lady
110	Sublime was the warning
96	The harp that once thro' Tara's halls
102	The meeting of the waters
129	The young May moon
130	The Minstrel-Boy
136	The time I've lost in wooing
99	Though the last glimpse of Erin
113	Thro' grief and thro' danger
118	'Tis believed that this Harp
128	'Tis the last rose of Summer
120	Weep on, weep on
109	We may roam thro' this world
95	When he, who adores thee
105	When in death I shall calm recline

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

By Henry C. Lunn.

Whether England is to be regarded politically as a country where innovative tendencies are rapidly gaining ground is a matter which we leave to those whose inclination or duty leads them to the investigation of such questions; but that in music it is as thoroughly conservative as the most bigoted Tory in art could desire, can scarcely we think be doubted. Year after year do so-called lovers of music purchase tickets for concerts, and rent boxes at the Opera to listen to one unvarying round of works, the only novel sensation possible to be obtained resulting from an occasional change of executants. The same Symphonies and Concertos, the same Oratorios, the same Operas, do duty every season, with a certainty of success which renders any criticism superfluous; and although the metropolis may now boast of a triennial musical festival, it is not only devoted exclusively to the works of Handel, but, with the exception of the "Selection day," exclusively to the same works; so that programmes of the Oratorios performed, subject only to the alteration of the names of the singers (who, contrary to the spirit of the festival, are liable to change), would be quite as available in 1874 as they were in 1868, and have been in the present year. It is true that in the genial early Spring, budding promises are temptingly put forth by the two Italian Opera-houses, but few of these are ever brought to maturity, and the subscribers and public therefore have now learned to open their ears and shut their mouths and be thankful for what the lessee sends them. This year, however, in addition to the gushing prospectuses of operatic doings, we have been awakened to the fact that, under the auspices of that exceedingly busy body of individuals, the Society of Arts, music is to be cultivated in the highest form at South Kensington; and, in order to found a nursery for infant musicians, six concerts have been given in the Royal Albert Hall. Considering that these performances have consisted entirely of the most worn materials, thrown together apparently by accident, we can scarcely believe that the art will be much benefited by such exhibitions, or that the prospect of those students who are waiting to be trained in the new music school from the proceeds of these concerts is an exceedingly brilliant one. The Albert Hall, architecturally considered, is in every respect a success; but, musically considered, it is a failure. The erection of a fine organ and the engagement of a thoroughly competent organist are redeeming features in the undertaking; but if what has already been done may be regarded as an earnest of the future, we shall begin to consider this gigantic building as a sort of suburban artistic hospital, where those veterans who have worked through a long life of concert and opera attendance in the metropolis shall dream away their days and evenings in lazily listening to reminiscences of the glorious times through which they have passed.

We are constantly reminded by our contemporaries that we have no right to complain of broken promises in the prospectus of an Opera-house, because it is impossible that the lessee can foresee the difficulties he will encounter in fulfilling them; but granting the truth of this, we must crave permission to ask why such pledges are ever made. Surely it would be more politic (merely considered in that sense) to issue a list of Operas intended to be performed, if practicable, during the season, for the subscribers might then imagine that every exertion had been made to put forward as much novelty as possible; but when works are unconditionally announced, the cast of the principal characters published, and in some cases even the date of their production mentioned, surely it becomes incumbent upon the lessee who utterly disregards these promises to assign a reason for what cannot but be regarded as a breach of contract. Opening the prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera for the season just concluded, for instance, we find the following list of Operas, not one of which has been produced:—"La Donna del Lago," "La Juive," "Les Diamants de la Couronne," "Le Prophète," "Der Freischütz," "Le Domino Noir," and "Il Matrimonio Segreto"—and yet with the exception of Madame Parepa-Rosa (who was prevented by illness from appearing) all the vocalists named in the cast of these works have been included in the company during the season. The only novelty given—Cimarosa's "Le Astuzie Femminili"—was performed at the fag end of the session, and with scarcely sufficient care to ensure a permanent success. The excellence of the music, however, delighted all whose taste was not too much modernized to enjoy a genuine work of art; and the applause and encores amply attested that even the general public was not insensible to the charm of Cimarosa's genial and melodious style. We can, of course, have no record of the works which have been kept back by the vocalists during the season, but from those which have been put forward by them we may mention two—Ambroise Thomas's "Hamlet" and Campana's "Esmeralda" neither of which would have a chance of a second hearing were our lyrical establishments chiefly supported by those who paid homage to art rather than to artists. That M. Faure's performance of the Danish Prince is in every respect admirable, and that Madame Patti does everything that can possibly be done for the part of Esmeralda we willingly concede; but the pretentious bombast of the first-named Opera and the commonplace strains of the latter cannot be concealed, even by the efforts of two such consummate singers; and we sincerely trust that these feeble works may next season give way to others of more real and lasting worth. Madame Adelina Patti has this season been more than ordinarily attractive in her well-known characters, and has also added two more to her list of successful parts—Desdemona, in Rossini's "Otello," and Leonora, in Verdi's "Il Trovatore"—her assumption of Valentina in "Les Huguenots" fully proving (in spite of her artistic vocalisation) that there are limits even to her versatile powers. Madame Pauline Lucca has again been a special favourite (although we confess that we do not enrol ourselves amongst her most [illegible]rs), and Madame Miolan-Carvalho, though perhaps scarcely the singer we remember her, was highly effective during the season. Mad[illegible] has thoroughly proved herself, if not a great artist, at least a dependable one, singing well in many parts better than we have yet heard her; and Mad[illegible]e. Csillag, as Donna Anna, in "Don Giovanni," was well received, but is scarcely likely to retain her hold on the public. Amongst other ladies who rendered efficient service during the season may be mentioned Mesdames Vanzini, De Meric-Lablache, Monbelli, Liebhart, and Mademoiselle Scalchi, whose excellent contralto voice was heard to much advantage on several occasions. It may be an interesting study to endeavour to discover how long a fine vocal organ can be made to last, but we regret that so great an artist as Signor Mario should have offered himself as a subject for the experiment. Year after year has he exhibited the gradual deterioration of those powers which won for him the highest position in the estimation of the public; and although a few truth-telling critics were indeed his kindest friends, he could not be made to believe it, and insisted upon battling with nature until he was fairly vanquished. His leave-taking this year was like the cordial hand-shaking bestowed upon a guest who has worn out his welcome; and, although it may be many years before we again have so accomplished a tenor on the operatic stage, for his own sake, as well as for that of the public, we cannot but hope that he will not again be tempted (like the prima donna with whom he was so long associated) to "revisit the scene of his former triumphs." Of Signor Mongini we have nothing new to say: he sang as well as ever—and as badly as ever; and in the heart of the season suddenly left the establishment, without, as far as we have heard, any cause being assigned for his departure. M. Faure made so genuine an effect that we question whether the subscribers will willingly spare him next year. His Guglielmo Tell, in Rossini's Opera; Mefistofele in Gounod's "Faust," Pietro, in Meyerbeer's "L'Etoile du Nord," and Hamlet (to which we have already incidentally alluded) were as perfect realisations of those characters, both vocally and histrionically, as the composers of the works could have possibly imagined; but why he was not heard as Caspar in "Der Freischütz," amongst other parts for which he was advertised, must remain, like many other sins of omission and commision at this establishment, an impenetrable mystery. Two new singers, Madame Fabbri and M. Jourdan, the latter appearing as Giorgio, in "L'Etoile du Nord," and the former as Donna Anna, in "Don Giovanni," made but a slight impression upon the audience, but it must be said of M. Jourdan (who comes to us from the Opera Comique, Paris) that he is a painstaking and reliable artist, although his voice and style are scarcely adapted to produce effect in a large opera-house. Signor Naudin has been invaluable in several parts during the season; and Signori Bettini, Bagagiolo, Ciampi, Fallar, and Raguer may also be selected for special commendation. That neither Signor Vianesi nor Signor Bevignani have satisfactorily fulfilled the office of conductor is scarcely to be traced to their incompetence for the office, no orchestra, however good may be the materials of which it is composed, having the slightest chance of gaining a perfect ensemble under two directors. It appears, however, that the lessee has resolved to persevere with this plan, and he must therefore abide by the consequences.

The prospectus of Her Majesty's Opera, at Drury Lane Theatre, contained the promise of many Operas to be produced; but as in many of them Madlle. Marimon (whose protracted illness must have seriously incommoded the plans of the management) was to have performed the principal character, the non-production of several of these works is legitimately accounted for. Cherubini's "Medea" and Wagner's "L'Olandese Dannato," however, we had a right to expect, especially as Madlle. Titiens and Madlle. Ilma di Murska, the two accepted heroines in these works, were singing throughout the entire season. Amongst the new comers announced by Mr. Mapleson we must give the first place to Madlle. Marimon, who although incapacitated by illness from appearing in more than two parts—Amina, in "La Sonnambula" and Maria, in "La Figlia del Reggimento"—created so genuine an effect that the subscribers and general public will look with much interest to her return next season, when we hope that our proverbially treacherous climate may treat her more mercifully. Madlle. Cecile Fernandez proved a highly useful member of the company, singing especially well as Smeaton, in Donizetti's "Anna Bolena;" Madlle. Ida Benza, announced in the prospectus, did not come at all; and Madlle. Canissa's single performance of Margherita, in Gounod's "Faust," convinced her hearers, if not herself, of her utter incompetence for the task. The first appearances amongst the male singers, were more fortunate (with the exception of Signor Rives, who failed as Mefistofele, in "Faust"), although little use seems to have been made of many who were really successful. M. Capoul, a very excellent tenor, but somewhat exaggerated in style, Signor Nicolini, another tenor with a voice of good quality, which he partially destroyed by the constant use of the tremolo, and Signor Mendioroz, a careful and reliable baritone, were often heard during the season; but Signor Prudenza, who made his first appearance as Edgardo, in "Lucia," Mr. Bentham, a young tenor of whom high expectations had been formed, Signor Moriami, also a good tenor, M. Belval, who had really a fine bass voice, Signor Bignio, an efficient baritone, who was announced in the prospectus for "L'Olandese Dannato," in Wagner's Opera, Signor Sparapani and Signor Borella had few opportunities of deepening the favourable impression they had made. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon the numerous and thoroughly successful performances of Madlle. Titiens, an artist now too well known to need more than a passing acknowledgment of her valuable services during the season; but we must again express our regret that she did not give us an opportunity of hearing her in Medea, which is unquestionably one of her finest parts. Madlle. Ilma di Murska has not only fully sustained her reputation in most of her favourite characters, but in many cases when Madlle. Marimon was unable to appear, she has worthily filled her place; and to Madlle. Leon-Duval we must also accord much praise for the manner in which she, on similar occasions, acted as a ready and most able substitute. To the singers already mentioned we must add the names of Madame Sinico, Madlle. Bauermeister, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signori Fancelli, Vizzani, Foli, Sinigaglia, Rocca, and Antonucci, all of whom deserve honourable mention for their exertions during the season. The revival of "Anna Bolena," of which we have spoken in another portion of our present number, was scarcely an event of sufficient importance to justify the management in keeping it underlined for such a length of time, as if this one quasi novelty, in prospect, should be considered enough to prevent any demand for other works which had been promised in the prospectus. The cast of the Operas performed during the season has been generally good; but with so many new singers on their trial, it must have been an exceedingly difficult task for the lessee to preserve a good working company which should satisfy the subscribers on all occasions, more especially as the precarious state of Madlle. Marimon's health could not allow him to rely upon her as an individual attraction. We have no sympathy with Mr. Mapleson's attempt to revive the Ballet. At the old "King's Theatre," this entertainment flourished in all its glory; and indeed until the opening of the Covent Garden Opera, where the lyrical drama may be said to have first asserted its undivided power, dancing occupied by far too much of the public attention. The endeavour to resuscitate the Ballet, as a special feature, is therefore a step backward; and all who desire to aid in cultivating the taste to the appreciation of the highest works in operatic art can scarcely regret the result of this year's experiment. The dancing of Madlle. Katti Lanner in the Ballets incidental to the Operas has, however, materially aided the general effect. It need scarcely be said that the engagement of Sir Michael Costa as conductor of the orchestra has made that department of the establishment unusually attractive during the season. Seldom indeed have we heard the accompaniments to the Operas so well performed; and could the chorus be taught to sing in tune, we think thatli ttle cause would be given to complain of the materials of which it is composed.

During the Autumn of last year the centenary of the birth of Beethoven was celebrated at the Crystal Palace by a very excellent performance of the whole of the Symphonies in regular order, besides several of his concertos and vocal pieces. Many of his works were also given at the Philharmonic, and at many other concerts the event was similarly recognised. At the Crystal Palace the recent series of what are termed "Opera Concerts" has acquired additional interest by the substitution of Recitals of well-known Operas for the heterogeneous mass of materials of which the programmes have been usually composed. Provided that these works continue to be judiciously selected, we think little doubt can exist as to this innovation being a very decided improvement. The concerts of Mr. Henry Leslie have been, as usual, amongst the legitimate attractions of the season, the excellence of his choir again asserting itself in that delicate part-music for which it is eminently fitted. Other concerts have also been given, under Mr. Leslie's name, for which the most eminent operatic vocalists have been engaged, most of which have been very well attended. We have but little to say of the performances of the Sacred Harmonic Society. The representations of the usual Oratorios during the season have been as remarkable as ever for the merits and demerits which we have so frequently pointed out. Many of the latter concerts have been given at the Albert Hall, a change we should think scarcely approved of by the solo vocalists. The "Oratorio Concerts" have again earned the thanks of all real artists, not only by the excellence of the manner in which the music has been performed, but by the perseverance with which the promoters of the undertaking continue to present to the public many works which, until the formation of these concerts, were comparatively unknown in England. Beethoven's sublime Mass in D—strangely enough passed over in all the performances expressly got up to glorify the name of this great composer—was this year given at the "Oratorio Concerts" with even greater effect than last season; and Bach's "Passion music" (to the excessive beauty of which the public is gradually becoming familiarised) had an equally fine rendering. The choir (under the able direction of Mr. Joseph Barnby) has now taken its place as an institution in the metropolis; and that the zeal and talent of the conductor may be repaid by a continuance of the prosperity which this association has so worthily gained must be the earnest wish of those who truly desire the healthy progress of the art in this country.

We have already alluded to the erection of the new organ at the Albert Hall, and have now only to express a hope that Mr. W. T. Best, who is permanently retained as organist, may do his utmost towards inculcating a love for those great works written for the instrument which in the metropolis are but too rarely heard. Considering that in England this "king of instruments" has been so long living in exile, it is not to be wondered at that certain of his insinuating subjects should have almost entirely usurped his power; and it is high time that the rights of the true monarch should be asserted and universally recognised.

The Triennial Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace, which has this year been attended with most gratifying pecuniary as well as artistic results, has again proved that the desire to hear the works of the great Oratorio writer whom we are proud to claim almost as a countryman, is not likely to die out. Admitting, however, that music is progressive (a fact shown, even in Handel's case, by the almost impossibility of performing his scores as he wrote them) there must be something wrong about this triennial worship of one man, if only because it proclaims to the music-loving public that no other should be considered worthy of the honour. If it be urged that the music of Handel only is suitable for an enormous body of vocalists to sing in an enormous space, then we say that those who organise the festival on the assumption of this fact beg the question by calling upon us to admit tacitly either the large number of singers or the large space to be desirable. Assuredly a grand periodical musical performance is in every respect to be wished for; but we question whether a miscellaneous selection of the greatest works in the art, irrespective of the names of their composers (such, indeed, as we find at the Rhenish musical festivals) carefully rehearsed by a picked body of executants, and given in a building constructed in accordance with the best known acoustical laws, would not take firmer ground as an artistic demonstration, and be likely to achieve higher and more lasting results.

The introduction of Bach's "Passion music" at Westminster Abbey on Maundy-Thursday is a proof that so sublime a setting of this service requires but to become known to be appreciated. The neglect of the religious works of Bach in England would be more extraordinary were it not obvious that it is through the concert-room that they must make their way to their legitimate home, the church. Even after their acceptance in a secular building, there can be little doubt that prejudice would effectually bar their entrance into a religious edifice had we not amongst those holding high positions in the church some few whose power to admit so important an aid as music, in its highest form, into religious worship is united with an intellect cultivated to the appreciation of the noblest compositions in the art. Now that the St. Matthew Passion music of Bach has been twice heard at the "Oratorio Concerts," has formed a portion of the service at Westminster Abbey, and is again to be given at the approaching Gloucester Festival, we may begin to hope that other great sacred works by the same composer may shortly receive that recognition by the general public of this country which has long been accorded to them by the select few.

The death of Auber, which occurred in the midst of the fearful struggle agitating Paris in the early part of the present year, removes from us the last of the three great creative artists—the other two being Meyerbeer and Rossini—whose residence in the French capital exercised so important an influence upon the musical taste of the city. Sigismond Thalberg, too, must be added to the obituary of the last season, although his retirement from professional life for some years will make his loss but little felt in the world of art.

A record of the principal events of the season would not be complete were we to omit mention of the manner in which the true position of musical artists has been acknowledged by the conferring of the honour of knighthood upon three who have worthily earned the right to such distinction. Sir Sterndale Bennett, Sir Julius Benedict and Sir George Elvey may be looked upon as representative men; and as they are all still engaged in the active pursuit of their profession, this official recognition of an art which unfortunately has hitherto been but too much neglected in high quarters, will be constantly kept before the public notice, and cannot fail to advance music and musicians in the estimation of all, more especially of those who are accustomed to wait for marks of royal favour before admitting the possibility of the existence either of social or artistic worth.

THE BEETHOVEN FESTIVAL AT BONN.

FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

The celebration of the centenary of the birth of Ludwig van Beethoven in his native town was arranged to take place, as may be remembered, about this time last year, and was postponed indefinitely on account of the war breaking out between France and Germany.

Few could have imagined that after such stirring and sanguinary events as followed immediately upon the declaration of war, this Musical Festival would still take place during a period of profound peace within a few months of the date which had been originally fixed.

It is equally difficult now to realize, amidst the signs of rejoicing which meet the eye on every side, that the nation has been engaged in a war of such terrible magnitude—or indeed, in a war at all. Nothing, however, can exceed the picturesque appearance presented by the quaint old university town in its holiday attire. The number of flags exhibited from the windows of the houses, the roofs of the hotels, and the spires of the churches, would astonish those whose ideas of a provincial Festival are founded upon the English type. It is still more interesting to note the calm and dignified gravity with which the business of the occasion is carried out by those who, in corresponding positions in England, would refuse to interfere in a Festival dedicated to a musician. A matter which is perhaps of the greatest importance as illustrating the difference between the estimation in which music is held in England and Germany is this—that whereas the arrangements for this Festival were completed and all rehearsals gone through last year, everything was begun again this year, as if nothing had been previously done; and although the principal items of the Bonn Festival were performed a few weeks ago, at the Lower Rhine Festival at Cologne, by the same artists, not one rehearsal was omitted or even curtailed. In short, whilst in England the question is "How few rehearsals can we manage to do with;" in Germany it is "How many can we possibly get." Under such circumstances, and with Dr. Ferdinand Hiller as the conductor, and the best solo singers, players, orchestra, and chorus, that Germany can produce, the ensemble may be imagined.

The hall in which the Festival was held was found to be admirably adapted for sound, and the organ, erected by a local builder, proved, under the skilful hands of Herr Franz Weber (organist of the Cathedral, Cologne), to be a valuable auxiliary.

The programme of the performance was as follows:—

(First Concert.)

The Mass in D, and the Symphony No. 5 (C minor).

MONDAY, AUGUST 21.

(Second Concert.)

Overture to "Leonora" No. 3; March and chorus from "The Ruins of Athens;" Concerto, violin (Herr Joachim); the Choral Fantasia, pianoforte (Herr Charles Hallé); the Eroica Symphony.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 22.

(Third Concert.)

Overture to "Coriolanus;" Elegy, "Sauft wie du lebtest;" Pianoforte Concerto in E flat (Herr Charles Hallé); Aria "Ah perfido," Madame Joachim; Overture to "Egmont;" Symphony No. 9.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 23.

(Chamber Concert.)

String Quartett, op. 95 (F minor), Herr Joachim, von Königslow, Strauss and F. Grützmacher; "Adelaide" (Herr Vogl); Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello op. 69 (A major), Dr. Hiller and F. Grützmacher; "Wonne der Wehmuth" and "Kennst du das Land" (Madame Joachim); String quartett, op. 59, No. 3 (C major).

The chorus was divided into 106 Sopranos, 92 Altos, 79 Tenors, 96 Basses. The orchestra contained 20 1st Violins, 16 2nd Violins, 14 Violas, 14 Violoncellos, 13 Double Basses and a double set of wind—in all 493 performers.

It is almost needless to say that at each performance every available space was occupied, and that a considerable proportion of the occupants were English. To many of the latter it must have been a matter of considerable interest to hear a German rendering of the Mass in D, the difficulties attending the production of which composition have gained for it in England the reputation of being beyond human capacity. This notion had however already been disproved in London, and was finally and triumphantly refuted at Bonn. After hearing it twice rehearsed entirely through with the principal solo singers, orchestra and chorus, and afterwards performed with an utter absence of such effort as might be considered strained, it is not too much to predict that ere long the Mass may form a not unfrequent item in the repertory of our sacred concerts, and be received with a warmth due to so high an effort of genius.

The performance of this work on the present occasion was in almost every respect worthy of the highest commendation, the Kyrie being broad and dignified, with a due appreciation of light and shade; the Gloria, vigorous and dashing, with startling effects of sudden pianissimo. The Fugue, "In gloria Dei," was perhaps the most successful effort on the part of the chorus during the entire Festival: here, however, the interest of this great movement culminated, the two changes of time (Poco più, Allegro and Presto) being insufficiently realized by the conductor to carry the excitement on to the conclusion of the movement; indeed, the Presto at the end was hardly, if at all, faster than the Allegro Vivace at the beginning of the Gloria. On the other hand, the Credo was unexceptionable from the beginning to the end, the various tempi, light and shade, and general balance of the whole being such as to leave absolutely nothing to be desired. The first section of the Sanctus appeared to be taken a little too fast, the almost regal effect generally produced by the entrance of the trombones being somewhat marred. The "Pleni sunt cœli" was sung apparently by the principal soloists, for they were seen to gesticulate wildly; but as the whole orchestra was playing at the same time, it is hardly surprising that not a note of the singers was heard. It would appear that the plan adopted at the Oratorio Concerts in London of giving the movement to the chorus is not only more expedient, but more in accordance with the composer's intention, despite the evidence of the autograph score. The performance of the Benedictus—by far the easiest number in the work—was the least satisfactory of all. The pace seemed to be a little excessive, an opinion evidently shared by Herr Strauss, who played the violin solo, and the consequence was a slight unsteadiness, which at one moment threatened to end in a disaster. The "Agnus Dei," with its continued changes of time, was steady throughout, and brought to a close a performance which may fairly be considered as the best that has hitherto taken place, either in or out of Germany.

As may be supposed, the well-known C minor Symphony received a rendering which was absolutely perfect, purity and largeness of tone being happily balanced by a marvellous delicacy and clearness of detail. The "Leonora" overture, which opened the second day's concert, was given with a vigour and precision which carried everything before it. An obstinate endeavour to gain an encore was met, we are glad to say, by a firm but polite refusal on the part of Dr. Hiller. The march and chorus from the "Ruins of Athens," received a comparatively tame rendering under the direction of a local professor, who, for some reason, was deputed to share the duties of conductor with Dr. Hiller. Under the same director, the orchestra failed in doing justice to the accompaniments of the Violin Concerto, the solo part of which was magnificently played by Herr Joachim. And, as though the orchestra had become somewhat demoralized by the change of conductors, all the efforts of Dr. Hiller failed to prevent the performance of the Choral Fantasia from being unsteady. The Eroica Symphony, however, made up for previous shortcomings—the performance being exceptionally fine.

The third Concert calls for little remark, except that the first part was not wholly successful as a performance, while the second part was eminently so—the Choral Symphony being rendered in a manner long to be remembered by those who heard it. The next day's programme, with its chamber concert, its excursion up the Rhine, its pic-nic, illuminations, procession to Beethoven's statue, etc., would form an interesting subject to dilate on did space permit. It must suffice to state that, looked at from every point of view, nothing could have been more satisfactory to an earnest minded musician than the manner in which the Festival was carried through. To glorify the memory of the greatest musical genius the world has ever seen, the most eminent musicians placed their services at the disposal of the Committee, and, without any thought of reward, gave up a week of valuable time, and looked upon it as a privilege to do so. Certainly Germany knows how to do honour to its great men.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Madlle. Marimon has repeated her excellent performance of Maria, in "La Figlia del Reggimento," during the past month, although perhaps with a slight diminution of her powers, owing to her recent indisposition. The revival of "Anna Bolena" was interesting chiefly on account of its having been associated in the mind of old Opera-goers with the names of Pasta, Rubini and Lablache; and as the work may be aptly termed a "singers' Opera," the contrast between the present and former cast formed the principal attraction of the performance. That vocalists can keep an Opera on the stage in spite of its worthlessness as a work of art can be proved by the fact of "Anna Bolena" only having achieved a partial success, even when other great artists than those we have named sustained the principal parts: with the decay of Pasta's powers in the heroine, the Opera may be said to have died, its resuscitation, even with such an Anna Bolena as Grisi, scarcely producing any permanent effect. Still less can we imagine that it will now retain its hold upon the public; for in spite of the excellent singing of Madlle. Titiens, the feebleness of the music seemed to make itself more than ever apparent to the majority of the audience; a proof, we hope, that their taste is being gradually weaned from the flimsy Italian school, and growing to a love of a higher and more enduring style. We may add that the part of Jane Seymour found a most efficient representative in Madame Sinico, and that Madlle. Fernandez sang the music of the Page, Smeaton, with good effect, the Romanza, "Deh! non voler" being received with well deserved applause. In the character of Percy, Signor Prudenza made a decided advance in public estimation, his delivery of "Vivi tu" being warmly applauded; and Signor Agnesi, as the Monarch, in spite of a slightly caricatured "make up," looked, acted, and sang the part with much judgment. With the second repetition of this Opera the establishment closed on the 5th ult.

COVENT GARDEN THEATRE.

Under the direction of M. Rivière, a series of Promenade Concerts was commenced at this theatre on Saturday the 19th ult., which, if we may judge from the crowded state of the house on the opening night, will in all probability prove highly successful. The appropriation of the first part of the programme on stated evenings to classical or sacred music is an attractive feature in the prospectus; and as popular pieces will have by far the greater share in the performances, we think the general public will scarcely grudge the small concession made to the taste of the select few. The programme at the inauguration concert included a March, composed and conducted by Prince Poniatowski, called "The Return of Richard Cœur de Lion," a selection from Mendelssohn's "Songs without words" (which, being arranged by M. Basquit for "full orchestra, military band and chorus," may be said to violate most effectually every intention of their composer), the "Bridesmaids' Waltz," composed and conducted by Mr. D. Godfrey, and a new March,

"Lusitania," by Sir Julius Benedict, all of which elicited an amount of applause more remarkable for enthusiasm than discrimination. Madlle. Carreno and Miss Flora Heilbron (the latter carefully stated in the programme to be "aged 13") were the solo pianists; and Madlle. Jenny Claus played a "Ballade et Polonaise," by Vieuxtemps, on the violin. The vocalists were Madlle. Fanny Rubini, Madame Haydee Abrek, Madame Demeric-Lablache, Madlle. Liebhart (who, as usual with a "popular" audience, was overwhelmed with applause), Signor Rocca, and Mr. Whitney, a bass, from Boston, of whose powers it would be scarcely fair to speak before hearing him in something more effective than Schumann's "Two Grenadiers." The quality of the fine orchestra was well displayed, not only in the pieces mentioned, but in a selection from the Opera of "Faust," and several other popular compositions. During the series of concerts, which is announced to extend to six weeks only, many favourite works are promised; and Mr. Arthur Sullivan has been engaged to conduct some of the "classical" and sacred performances.

The Third Public Rehearsal of the North London Sacred Harmonic Society was held at the United Methodist Free Church Lecture Hall, Charlotte Street, Caledonian Road, on Tuesday the 1st ult., Handel's Oratorio, "Judas Maccabæus," being selected for the occasion. The principal singers were Misses Fonsica, Bent and Purssey; Mesrss. Charles and Smith. The performance was very successful, and reflected the greatest credit upon the talented and painstaking conductor, Mr. J. Boyce. "Samson" will be the next Oratorio rehearsed.

A correspondent informs us that Mr. Alfred Hemming, a tenor singer, who has been in Italy for the last two years, has met with great success there, and particularly distinguished himself at a concert at the Conservatoire. He may probably arrive in England in time for the next season.

Our readers may remember that in an article called "A Comic Concert," we some time ago drew attention to the senseless trash which is nightly listened to and applauded at the so-called "Music-halls" in the metropolis, and by the singing of which many men (whose unmeaning faces we are sorry to see exhibited in the windows of music-shops in the most frequented thoroughfares) are not only obtaining notoriety, but amassing large sums of money. The Daily Telegraph has now, we are glad to find, followed our example; and in a recent account of "An Amateur Comic Singing Match," related how ten aspiring young men, whose noblest ambition seemed to be to copy the "make up" and manner of the Music-hall celebrities, competed in public for a silver cup, the prize being awarded, after a contest in which it was hard to say which showed himself the greatest idiot, for a song which, in addition to its consisting almost entirely of the vulgarest slang, contained allusions of a nature to give free scope to the vocalist for innumerable unmistakable gestures, which were received by the male portion of the audience with uproarious applause. Seeing that at these establishments the proprietors are constantly fined for performing selections from such works as the "Bohemian Girl" and "Masaniello," we ask whether the class of entertainment described by our contemporary—outraging not only art, but common sense and even common decency—is that which the magistrates, in their wisdom, have "licensed."

The Archbishop of Canterbury has recently conferred the degree of Doctor of Music on Herbert S. Oakeley, Professor of Music at the University of Edinburgh.

We hear that Mr. James Milnes, of Leeds, who has just completed the course of musical study at the Conservatorium, Leipsic, has recently passed a most successful examination, and received a certificate of high merit for pianoforte and harmony from the Professors of the Conservatorium.

We are informed that the prize of five guineas, offered by the Diocesan Church Music Society, for the best anthem suitable for a Festival of Parish Choirs, has been adjudged to Thomas Tallis Trimnell, Esq., organist of Chesterfield, Derbyshire. The exercise bearing the motto "Labor ipse voluptas," by Mr. H. Keeton, of Peterborough, was "highly commended." Between thirty and forty compositions were sent in.

The correspondence between the Rev. Brooke Lambert, Curate in charge of St. Ann's Church, Rainhill, and Mr. J. J. Monk, organist of that church, which has appeared in some of the Liverpool papers, and been forwarded to us for publication, adds one more to the many instances of the want of unanimity of feeling which should exist between the clergy and those artists whose responsible duty it is to carry out the musical services of the church. It would be impossible in our limited space to insert all the letters which we have received, and to condense them would not be fair to either party; but we may remark, without entering upon the question of the organist's justification in the course he pursued, that when a clergyman writes "Mr. Monk" at the top of his letter, and merely signs his name at the end, it can scarcely be expected that his communications—even were they couched in more courteous terms than the Rev. Brooke Lambert has thought proper to use—would be at all likely to command that respect which should be inseparably associated with the sacred character of their writer.

O how amiable are Thy dwellings. Anthem, by Joseph Barnby.

A setting of these words, which avoids the bad accent and uncouth harmony of the Anthem by Bishop or Richardson, and also the pretentious heaviness of that by Greene, must necessarily be useful. Mr. Barnby has here produced a short work which will recommend itself to all, by its simplicity of form and sweetness of melody.

I will give thanks unto Thee, O Lord. Anthem, by Joseph Barnby.

This Anthem, which was composed for the festival of the Richmond and Kingston District Church Choral Association, will be found exceedingly effective in any church where the organ takes its proper place as a means of independent accompaniment. The first chorus is cheerful and bright, and contains many nice harmonic effects, a modulation into B major forming a capital contrast to the rest of the movement. A "verse" or "semi-chorus" follows, to the words, "The eyes of all wait upon Thee," the theme of which is eventually varied by a flowing passage of a graceful character in the organ part. In the doxology, which is given in the form of a chorale, will be found an excellent treatment of the voices in unison, at the words "To the Father and the Son, And the Spirit, Three in One." From this metrical doxology, a movement in triple time breaks forth, "Great is our Lord," which leads admirably once more into the chorale, with the repetition of which the Anthem closes.

The Lord that made heaven and earth. Full Anthem by James Turle.

Mr. Turle's contributions to Church Music have been so well received that it is to be regretted that they are not more numerous. The short Anthem before us, though not possessing any claims to originality either in form or harmony, is pleasing and well written.

The Lord is loving unto every man. Thanksgiving Anthem by G. M. Garrett, Mus. Doc.

Church Music having gone through the period when regularity of general form was completely sacrificed to the combinations of subjects enforced by counterpoint, seems somewhat inclined to go too far, by reaction, in the opposite direction; and now, words are often sacrificed to suit the exigences of the constantly repeated phrase of four or eight bars in length. Thus, in the Anthem before us we have, "And His mercy is over, over all His works. His mercy is over, over all His works." It is evident that the expression "His mercy is over," would be meaningless, were it not a mere "filling in" of a phrase of a stated length. But in thus finding fault, we are pointing out a bad habit which is prevalent amongst very many church composers, not one especially confined to Dr. Garrett, who has here given us a very charming composition, the original theme of which is relieved by the introduction of a spirited subject in the key of the dominant. The harmony, and general treatment throughout show the hand of a highly trained musician. This Anthem will unquestionably be found most useful and effective, whether sung in a cathedral or parish church, or by a large or small choir.

The Canticles (Te Deum, Benedictus, Jubilate, Magnificat, Nunc dimittis, Cantate Domino, and Deus misereatur). Set to Music in Chant form by Joseph Barnby.

Those who are interested in the work of parish choirs, and who know the difficulty of getting settings of the Canticles which shall be not too long, or too elaborate, or too uninteresting, will welcome Mr. Barnby's effort. He has perhaps adhered too rigidly to the chant form, especially in such cases as occur in the Te Deum, where words of one syllable have to be dragged through several bars of the chant. The "O - - - - Christ," which is so objectionable in the ordinary pointing for Chants, should have been avoided. But on the whole, organists and præcentors will be glad of this addition to their present stock of music, which though plentiful, is not always very choice.

Lucrezia Borgia. A Tragic Opera in two acts and a prologue. Composed by G. Donizetti. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

In an "Editor's Note" to this edition of one of Donizetti's most popular works we are told that it corresponds with the version performed at our Italian Operas, "evidently containing the composer's improvements upon his first conception." As will appear by comparing the several printed editions which exist, the Opera has from time to time undergone very extensive alterations, one of the most important of which is the substitution of the air "Anch' io provai" (composed expressly for Signor Mario), for a duet and chorus, which pieces are in this version judiciously placed in an appendix. The same care bestowed upon all the former Operas in this series is observable throughout the one before us; the important points of the score being always indicated, and the translation—an exceedingly difficult task, especially in many of the impassioned concerted pieces—being in every respect highly satisfactory.

Paraphrase sur "Gallia." Cantate de Ch. Gounod, par Camille Saint-Saëns.

M. Gounod is lucky in having his beautiful Cantata paraphrased by an able and conscientious artist like M. Saint-Saëns. So carefully indeed is the piece written that, without presenting any formidable difficulties to the pianist, the salient portions of the composition are displayed with such effect as to convey to strangers a very good notion of the entire work. The feeling of the pathetic opening, in E minor, with the plaintive holding notes for the horns, is excellently preserved in the pianoforte arrangement; and the legato melodies for the solo voice are also admirably transcribed. Were all "paraphrases" as good as this, we should have nothing whatever to say against this class of composition. The piece is, we think, likely to become popular.

La Capricieuse. Impromptu, pour le Piano, par Alfred Jaell. Op. 138.

A really excellent Impromptu, in G minor, highly interesting as a composition, and written for the instrument with that skill which might be expected from so accomplished a pianist. The second subject, in E flat major, with the accompaniment divided between the two hands, is extremely melodious; and the theme flowing at the top of a series of arpeggios, is not only highly effective, but will prove an admirable study for this style of playing. Advanced pianists will find this Impromptu a welcome addition to their stock of modern music.

Sancta Maria. Song. Dedicated to Her Majesty Marie Henriette Anne, Queen of the Belgians. The words translated from the French of J. Bertrand, by H. W. Dulcken, Ph.D. The music composed by J. Faure.

This Hymn, which is also published with the original French words, can scarcely fail to attain a speedy and wide popularity. A lovely placid theme, commencing with the pianoforte—the voice beginning on the fifth of the chord for each line of the poetry, and ending the first phrase by dropping from a flattened sixth to the dominant—is peculiarly sympathetic with the feeling of the verses, which are indeed most excellently translated by Dr. Dulcken. This first subject is effectively contrasted by a melody, with a rapid arpeggio accompaniment, intended of course for the harp, the conclusion of the verse, where the voice mounts to the upper A, being a point of much interest. The Hymn has already been introduced to a concert-room audience through the exquisite singing of Madame Adelina Patti.

Trios and Quartetts for Female Voices. Composed by Henry Hiles, Mus. Doc., Oxon.

1. The Song of the Lark (Summer). Trio. Poetry by Felicia Hemans. 2. Open, oh Heaven! (A Dirge). Trio. Poetry by Adelaide Anne Procter. 3. To Primroses filled with morning dew. Trio. Poetry by Robert Herrick. 4. Where are the Swallows fled? Quartett. Poetry by Adelaide Anne Procter. 5. The Summer's call. Quartett. Poetry by Felicia Hemans. 6. To the Ocean now I fly. Quartett. Poetry by Milton.

Dr. Hiles has acted wisely in choosing good poetry for the exercise of his powers, for we cannot but believe that feeble words are very likely to produce feeble music. Since part-singing has become a recognized branch of study in ladies' schools, composers of acknowledged talent have done much towards cultivating a taste for something better than well-known songs harmonized; and the compositions before us will, we think, be found a valuable contribution to the rapidly increasing stock of part-music for female voices. No. 1 has a fresh and melodious subject, some good effects being gained by the voices answering each other, especially on the words "There is joy." The composer has cleverly secured a rallentando in the last four bars, by writing them in $\frac{9}{8}$ rhythm, instead of $\frac{3}{4}$. The words of No. 2 are very sympathetically set; and, apart from its melodious beauty, the trio will form an excellent exercise for expressive part-singing. The conclusion, where the contralto drops to the low B, and afterwards joins the other voices in an ascending scale to the dominant harmony, is extremely beautiful. No. 3, commencing with the soprano voice, is based on a charming subject, most skilfully harmonized, the phrase "Why do ye weep?" especially, having received most careful consideration from the composer, who has shown throughout this composition that he can thoroughly feel the true spirit of Herrick's poetry. No. 4 is rather more broken in character at the beginning, a melody being written to the line "Where are the swallows fled?" and the voices afterwards repeating the word "Where?" with much effect. Miss Procter's verses have indeed been most tenderly treated throughout this quartett, which is likely to become one of the most popular of the set. No. 5 is perhaps scarcely so attractive as those already noticed, but the subject speaks the words with much fidelity, and it is sufficiently simple in construction to give but little trouble to the vocalists. No. 6 has a light and pleasing melody, commencing in canon on the unison. The imitation is skilfully kept up; and where the four voices come together, the harmonies are appropriate and well written. There is sufficient contrast of style in these Trios and Quartetts to make them all acceptable both to teachers and pupils.

Three Songs about a Rose; for a Tenor voice. Composed by Morton Latham.

Were these songs merely grammatically incorrect, we should pass them over in the crowd of similar productions which come before us; but as the composer shows a decided talent for melody, with a laudable desire to express the words according to their meaning, we counsel him either to have his works submitted to a competent professor before publication, or to place himself at once under a systematic course of study. In the first place he would learn how to treat the chord of the $\frac{6}{4}$, and at all events he would not have two of these chords in succession, moving together in octaves, such as occur in the third song, between the third and fourth bar of the third page. Then he would also be taught not to write his harmonies by ear, as an instance of which we must tell him that in the same song we have alluded to, in the last bar of page 2, the B flat should be A sharp, and the chord would then be a diminished 7th, which should resolve to a $\frac{6}{4}$ on the dominant, B. Let Mr. Latham try this harmony, and he will soon be convinced of the necessity of comprehending the theory of the art he practises.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

The Song of the Pine Tree. Words by H. Beales. Music by Claudius H. Couldery.

Mr. Couldery is rapidly passing from the rank of promising young composers and taking his place with the best English writers of the day. This song is full of dramatic power. A striking theme, in F minor, excellently adapted to the poetry, is sufficiently quietly accompanied to permit the due expression of the words; and even in the impassioned parts, especially where the thundering avalanche tempts the outburst of a series of chromatic harmonies, the composer never forgets that he is writing a song. If our public singers selected their solos only from the most meritorious productions, the "Song of the Pine Tree" would speedily find its way into the concert-room.

That dear Song I loved the best. Words by Charles J. Rowe. Composed by Allan Hyde.

We know not whether an experienced composer is hidden under the name of "Allan Hyde," but this little song, unpretending as it is, does not appear the work of a novice. The melody is extremely pleasing, and the accompaniment is written with much grace and refinement. We do not, however, like the A, G, in the bass, proceeding from a diminished to a perfect fifth with the voice part, in the 8th bar of page 4: this arises from altering the melody and retaining the same accompaniment as that to the first verse: the substitution of a single note would remedy the defect.

The Soldier's Widow to her Child. Ballad. Written by W. L. Gammond. Music by J. L. Hatton.

Mr. Hatton has set some very pathetic words with so much sympathetic feeling that we cannot but recommend the song, although we own to being somewhat tired of the lugubrious ballads with which we are so plentifully supplied in the present day. The melody speaks the lament of the soldier's widow with real tenderness; and we may especially cite the modulation into the tonic minor, to the words, "For cruel war robb'd me of him," as an excellent point. The harmonies and accompaniments are as thoroughly satisfactory as might be expected from the pen of so accomplished a musician as Mr. Hatton, and are sufficiently varied to give effect to, without disturbing, the voice part.

Ashdown and Parry.

Overture to "Oberon." (Weber.) Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards.

A new transcription of the overture to "Oberon" was of course not called for unless some novel features were introduced which should make it stand apart from the many standard arrangements which have been so long in use. Mr. Richards says, "In this edition some of the passages have been arranged with a view to realize as nearly as possible the orchestral effects, without the necessity, as in previous arrangements, of altering the time." This plan has, we think, been successfully carried out. The rapid passage for flutes and clarionets in the Introduction, for instance, is written in two parts only, which certainly places it more comfortably under the hands, and renders any rallentando unnecessary. No arrangement can make the overture anything but a difficult piece for the pianoforte; but Mr. Richards has, we think, performed his task with much credit, and he well deserves the thanks of all amateurs in consequence.

Où voulez-vous aller. Barcarolle, de Gounod. Transcrite pour Piano.

Mendelssohn's Concerto. (Op. 64.) Paraphrase for the Pianoforte.

La Sympathie. Dialogue Musical, pour Piano. By Sidney Smith.

Mr. Smith should, we think, take it as a compliment when we say that we prefer his original piece to his arrangements. The transcription of Gounod's Barcarolle, and the Fantasia from "Il Barbiere," are fair specimens of approved domestic pianoforte music, and the arranger deserves a certain amount of credit for his skill; but when he touches Mendelssohn's Concerto (which, by the bye, it should be stated is that for the violin) he ventures on classical ground and invites more earnest criticism. Our chief objection to most of these musical "paraphrases" is that they cause confused ideas with amateurs as to the construction of the original work; and in the case before us, persons unacquainted with the violin Concerto would indeed be puzzled to separate Mendelssohn from Smith. The title, "Mendelssohn's Concerto (Op. 64)," on the cover of the piece, too, to say nothing of its not conveying any information to the general public as to what Concerto it is, certainly would lead most people to imagine that it is an arrangement of the entire work for the pianoforte. Passing on with pleasure to the elegant little piece "La Sympathie," we have nothing but praise to award. In this sketch, which is appropriately called a "Dialogue musical," the composer has never once been betrayed into either "fine writing" or patchiness, but has allowed the subject to flow on naturally to its legitimate conclusion. We shall be glad if Mr. Sidney Smith will give us more of such compositions; and he will materially add to the obligation if, being an Englishman, he will allow the title-pages of his works to appear in his native language.

Schott and Co.

Chant élégiaque, pour Violoncelle solo, avec accompagnement de Piano. Composé par Berthold Tours.

The compositions of Mr. Berthold Tours are multiplying fast, but by no means too fast for those who have long ago hailed him as an earnest and enthusiastic disciple of true art. In no one of his works do we find instances of haste or carelessness; and although it cannot be expected that so prolific a composer should be equally happy in every production, we have not yet seen a piece of his which does not evince the possession of an originating power, and the faculty of throwing a grace and elegance around his subjects which cannot fail to command admiration both from musical and non-musical hearers. The piece before us will be a real boon to violoncello players who wish to devote their attention to good music. The theme, in $\frac{12}{8}$ rhythm, is extremely melodious; and although the pianoforte part is modestly called an accompaniment, it is so effectively written, and contains so many independent points, that the composition should be more fitly described as a duet for the two instruments. The violoncello passages are well considered throughout; and the conversational bits are written with that sympathetic feeling which, to do the composer full justice, must be faithfully reflected by both performers. As an unpretending piece of chamber-music this is one of the most charming we have seen for some years.

J. F. BORSCHITZKY.

Two-part and Three-part School Songs. Second Set, with Pianoforte Guidance, ad lib. Composed by J. F. Borschitzky.

THESE Kinder-Garten songs will prove excellent practice in schools where vocal music is carefully taught. They are all melodious, appropriately harmonized, and easy to sing, without being childishly simple. The words are always well selected—such writers as Wordsworth, Longfellow and Mackay being amongst the authors chosen from—and the pianoforte "guidance" is really what it professes to be. Music adapted for the special purpose of training pupils to sing in parts, so well considered and healthy as this deserves extensive encouragement.

WEEKES AND CO.

Two Sketches, for the Pianoforte.
Minuet and Trio in E flat, for the Pianoforte.
Composed by G. A. B. Beecroft.

THESE unpretending little pieces are quite refreshing after the multitudes of frivolous compositions "de Salon," which we are compelled daily to wade through. Mr. Beecroft has a feeling both for melody and harmony, and writes with that grace which evidences a cultivated musical taste. We like his sketches very much, more especially the first, which is treated throughout with a simplicity which cannot be too much commended. The second is rather more conventional, being merely a "song without words;" but it is melodious and, played with a refined touch, cannot fail to please. The "Minuet and Trio" may be recommended as excellently adapted for teaching. The theme of the Minuet is extremely attractive, and has the merit of not too closely reminding us of the many similar movements from the classical authors constantly floating in the mind. The Trio is scarcely perhaps as interesting as the Minuet, but it contrasts well with it, and contains many effective points. Mr. Beecroft is, we think, justified in trying his hand at a full Sonata, but let us hope that he will not add "Quasi Fantasia" on the title-page—those two words so commonly used by tyros to cover their want of constructive power.

The Wild Rosebud. Song. The words from the German of Goethe. Translated by Theodore Martin, Esq. Composed by Josephine Williams, Associate of the R.A.M.

A GENUINE and healthy ballad, written in a school which needs to be encouraged in these days of maudlin sentimentality and pedantic mediocrity. A pure melody, and a simple but thoroughly musicianlike accompaniment are so rarely to be found in modern vocal effusions that we cannot but counsel Miss Williams to persevere in the path she has chosen. We are particularly pleased with the phrase in the relative minor, after the double bar; and the return to what may be called the burden of the song, with the arpeggio accompaniment, is exceedingly effective.

WILLIAM MORLEY.

Le Lac. Romance for Pianoforte. By W. C. Levey.

ALTHOUGH the real origin of this piece is announced on the title-page, the outside proclaims it to be a Romance "by W. C. Levey." Considering that it is merely a transcription of Niedermeyer's well-known song "Le Lac," we think that as the title on the cover is the first, if not the only, one which strikes the eye of intending purchasers, Mr. Levey's name should there have appeared second to that of Niedermeyer. As an arrangement of the melody it is entitled to warm commendation; and pianists who have studied the art of playing an air "sans paroles," will find this a most attractive piece on which to exercise their powers. The excessive beauty of the theme will be certain to ensure it a welcome with a drawing-room audience.

JOHN MENZIES AND CO., EDINBURGH AND GLASGOW; AND HOULSTON AND SONS, LONDON.

The Centenary Souvenir. Six Songs by Sir Walter Scott. The music by George Croal.

THE composer of these songs states in his preface that he was present at the dinner of the Theatrical Fund in Edinburgh when Sir Walter Scott publicly avowed himself the author of "Waverley;" and naturally feeling much interest in the celebration of the centenary of the great novelist, he has produced this attractive little volume as a souvenir of the event. The compositions are exceedingly meritorious, and although not equal in merit, they are all melodious, vocal, and thoroughly Scottish in character. We are inclined to select for especial commendation "Soldier, rest," "The Wandering Harper," and "The Cavalier," the first named being full of feeling, and truly sympathetic with the words. The accompaniments are generally carefully written—so carefully, indeed, that we wonder how two such glaring consecutive fifths as occur between the voice-part and bass, in the second bar on page 9, could have crept in. Mr. Croal has selected some songs which have not been too much hackneyed; and we are even inclined to agree with the composer's assertion that they are "almost unknown to the present generation in a lyrical form."

J. MCDOWELL AND CO.

Gavotte Favorite de Marie Antoinette (1774), pour Piano; par Ch. Neustedt.

A QUAINT and characteristic melody, which cannot fail to attract those lovers of real music whose ears are perforce tuned to the manufactured sickly "themes" of the present day. We care little for the modern ornaments of the arranger, and believe that the subject simply set forth would have been infinitely more satisfactory. The publishers of course will not agree with us; but we very much doubt whether the taste of the public in these matters is not greatly underrated.

The Gallant Cross of Red. Written and composed by J. L. Richardson.

As we find that this song is stated to be "arranged by A. J. Sutton, Esq.," we may conclude that the author of the poetry is not musician enough to do more than imagine a melody to his words. Without being unduly critical upon the music, therefore—although we may say that it is sufficiently well suited for the purpose, if not strikingly original—we must give much credit to Mr. Richardson for his verses, which are well written and full of feeling. The introduction of the chorus at the end of each verse gives additional importance to a composition which deserves recognition as drawing attention to a subject which in connection with the late war, should not be allowed to pass from our memory.

WOOD AND CO.

Scherzo Giojante, for the Pianoforte.
Scherzo, nello stile Napolitano, for the Pianoforte.
Composed by Franz M. D'Alquen.

BOTH these pieces, dedicated to Madame Piatti "by her old friend and master," are good specimens of healthy writing. The subject of the first Scherzo is peculiar, but it has much character, and in spite of a certain amount of thinness in the harmonies, is highly effective. The theme in the relative minor, forms a good contrast. The second piece, "nello stile Napolitano," is by far the better of the two. A melodious Scherzo, in D minor, is followed by a movement, "meno mosso," in the tonic major, which contains some interesting points, a staccato accompaniment being taken against a legato subject, both of which are alternated between the two hands. These compositions may be recommended, not only as musician-like works, but as containing a certain amount of originality which is too rare to be passed over.

DUFF AND STEWART.

Guillaume Tell. Rossini's celebrated Terzetto "Al tuo materno sen," arranged for the Pianoforte by Charles Salaman.

WE know not why this piece should be headed "Guillaume Tell," seeing that it is simply an arrangement of the favourite Trio "Al tuo materno sen;" but publishers will do strange things, and, as a rule, we by no means hold composers responsible for the title-pages of their works. Mr. Salaman, as might be anticipated, has acquitted himself well of his task, and written a piece which is likely to find favour with all pianists who delight in reproducing the gems from well-known operas. The passages, although effectively laid out, are never unduly elaborated; and pianists of no extraordinary power will therefore find this transcription thoroughly within their reach.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—Through the columns of your valuable journal I wish to make an appeal to the Clergy of the Church of England to increase the salary of their Organists. "The labourer is worthy of his hire"—and it is a standing shame against the Church of England that those who conduct her music should have to work all their leisure time at teaching the pianoforte, or writing brilliant Fantasias on popular airs to gain a bare subsistence, besides having to teach a choir with three services on Sunday, and, in some cases, daily service, at eighty pounds a year. I am not an organist or professional musician; but I leave your readers to judge whether such treatment is proper for votaries of the highest branch of the classical art.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

For instance in* $\frac{2}{4}$ rhythm a group of six semiquavers would be played in two threes, but in $\frac{6}{8}$ it would be played in three twos. In the example quoted the time will sufficiently show that the semiquavers must be divided into triplets.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

CANTERBURY, NEW ZEALAND.—The first performance in Canterbury of the Oratorio, Elijah, was given by the Mendelssohn Society, Christchurch, on Friday, the 19th May, at the Canterbury Music Hall. The whole of the work was rendered in a very creditable manner, the choruses being especially well sung. The important part of the Prophet was undertaken by Mr. G. Palairet, and was well sustained throughout. Amongst the pieces more particularly calling for commendation may be mentioned the duet, "Help me, man of God," by Mrs. Digby and Mr. G. Palairet; "Woe unto them," by Mrs. Palairet, and the chorus "Thanks be to God," which was sung in splendid style. The members of this Society and their musical director (Mr. Robert Parker), under whose direction the concert was given, may fairly be congratulated on the successful rendering of this difficult Oratorio. The orchestra, under the leadership of Mr. Bünz, contributed in no small degree to the excellence of the performance. Miss Marshman presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. Milner at the harmonium.

CAPE TOWN, CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The festival of the Confession of Augsburg was celebrated in the Evangelical Lutheran Church on Sunday, the 25th June, when some choice selections of sacred music were admirably rendered by an efficient and well trained choir, under the able direction of Mr. J. H. Ashley. The first of these was the "Sanctus" from Mozart's Requiem Mass. This was followed by a contralto solo from Sir Michael Costa's Oratorio, Eli, given with great taste and feeling by Miss Wahl. After the second hymn Dr. Boyce's Anthem "Wherewithal shall a young man" was sung, the verse parts being rendered with good effect, and the final chorus with precision and animation. The concluding selection of the Morning Service was the air "But thou didst not leave," and chorus "Lift up your heads," from Handel's Messiah. The former of these was given by Miss Sederstrom with much feeling, and the latter was also most succesfully performed. The first of the evening selections was the Anthem, "Lord, who shall abide," in which the duet for soprano and bass, with choral accompaniment, was highly effective; and the contralto solo, "Praise the Lord, O my Soul" (Greene), was most carefully executed. The motett "O Saving Victim" consisting of soprano solo and chorus, was sung in a manner which, taking into consideration the difficulties of the music, reflected great credit on the performers; and the Recitative and Air from Costa's Eli was admirably adapted for the display of the talents of the fair vocalist. The grand chorus, "The Heavens are telling," from Haydn's Creation, was a fitting musical conclusion to the festival, and was, indeed, the best rendered of the choruses of the day. No small portion of the success of the festival was due to the admirable performance of Mr. Darter, who kindly came forward at the last moment to supply the place of the regular organist, who was indisposed.

COLNBROOK, NEAR WINDSOR.—Thursday, the 3rd ult., was observed as a Thanksgiving Festival, on the completion of the improvements in the Parish Church, which have been carried out under the direction of Joseph Bland, Esq., trustee to a fund with which the church is endowed for its constant repairs. In the chancel the choir has been repaired, and the east wall of the sanctuary of the altar has been adorned with encaustic tiles, both the offering of R. Percival Daniell, Esq., of Longley House, Slough. The remainder of the east wall to the roof is covered with a beautiful diaper work, terminating in what is called a "Himmel," or heaven, of an intense blue, studded with golden stars, and the Hebrew sacred characters surrounded by a glory in the centre. This is the offering and work of Mr. Robert Sargeant, of St. John's, Uxbridge Moor, late a student of St. Augustine's College Canterbury, who wished to mark his long and happy connection with Colnbrook Church by this beautiful memorial. The remainder of the adornments were completed under the direction of the churchwardens, Messrs. Jones and Mole. The entrance to the churchyard has been much improved by a Lych Gate, designed by Mr. Edgington, of Windsor: this has been effected by the united labours of a committee of townspeople. A procession was formed at the vicarage at eleven o'clock, under the direction of the vicar, the Rev. W. Grieve, consisting of the choir-boys, Mr. R. Radcliffe, choirmaster, and a number of the principal clergy, who entered the church singing the hymn, "Brightly gleams our Banner. The service was choral throughout. The Anthem, "Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem" (Scott), was well rendered by the choir. Miss M. Ratcliff presided at the organ. After service a cold collation was served to about 250 persons in a spacious marquee in the vicarage grounds. After tea even-song was performed with full choral service, the prayers being intoned by the Rev. W. Grieve, M.A. The committee formed for carrying out the arrangements spared nothing to make the festival a success; and they have every reason to congratulate themselves on the result of their efforts.

Crewe.—On the evening of Monday, the 7th ult., the members of the Crewe Philharmonic Society and their friends met together at a social tea meeting in the large class-room of the Mechanics' Institution, the object being to present to the conductor, Mr. Edward Chapman, a testimonial in consideration of the invaluable aid he had given to the Society. Mr. W. H. Dykes, a member of the Society, was unanimously voted in the chair. After some highly eulogistic remarks on the services rendered to the Society by their conductor, Mr. Dykes called upon the honorary secretary, Mr. J. D. Wright, to make the presentation, which consisted of a large size photographic portrait of Mr. Chapman, and an elegant silver-mounted baton, suitably inscribed. A full orchestral score of the Creation was also to have been given, but the binder had failed to send it in time for the meeting. Mr. Wright spoke most earnestly and enthusiastically on the efforts made by Mr. Chapman to cultivate a taste for the highest music, and trusted that the present would be accepted, not on account of its intrinsic value, but as a mark of esteem from the members of the Association. On receiving the testimonial, Mr. Chapman was loudly applauded, and after making a suitable reply, a selection of music was performed, which was listened to with much attention.

Deal.—On Monday evening, the 7th ult., the first of a series of Weekly Concerts took place at the Assembly Rooms, under the conductorship of Mr. W. B. Harrison. Miss Ellen Glanville and Mr. Stanton were warmly and deservedly applauded in all their songs, and Mr. Parker (violin), and Mr. Harrison (pianoforte), performed solos with much effect. Mr. Harrison deserves to be congratulated on the success of his opening concert, and we trust that he may continue to meet with the encouragement he so well merits.

Edinburgh.—During the visit of the British Association the members and associates assembled in the music class-room of the University to hear an organ Recital by Dr. Oakeley. The first part of the programme consisted of compositions for the organ, and the second of adaptations and arrangements for the instrument. It is needless to say that the performance afforded the highest gratification to a large audience, and that the applause was spontaneous and enthusiastic.

Keswick.—An interesting organ Recital was given at the Parish Church of Crosthwaite on the 28th July, by Mr. P. T. Freeman, before an audience comprising the principal families of the neighbourhood. The programme was selected from the works of the most classical writers, and included one of Mendelssohn's organ Sonatas, a Prelude and Fugue by the same composer, Sir G. Elvey's Festal March (written for the marriage of H.R.H the Princess Louise), a grand Fugue, in D, by Bach, and the Hallelujah Chorus, from Beethoven's Mount of Olives. The performance was listened to throughout with much attention.

New Brighton.—The first of a series of popular classical concerts was given on Wednesday evening, the 23rd ult., when an interesting programme was provided. It opened with Beethoven's Trio in C minor, op. 1, No. 3, well played by Mrs. Beesley, Mr. H. Lawson, and Sig. Bodani. Mrs. Beesley and Mr. Lawson gave an admirable rendering of Beethoven's Sonata in F for pianoforte and violin. Mrs. Beesley's performance of Weber's "Moto continuo," on the pianoforte, was much admired, and the same may be said of the solos for violin and violoncello. Madame Billinie Porter was the vocalist, and she displayed a charmingly fresh voice, and a cultivated musician-like style.

Newport, Isle of Wight.—A festival of the choirs of the Isle of Wight was held at St. Thomas's Church, on Thursday, the 10th ult., and was of a very successful character. The voices numbered about 400, and for some weeks previous they had had the advantage of the training and great musical knowledge of the Rev. W. H. Nutter, M.A., who spared no pains to perfect the choirs in the important parts which they were called upon to perform on this occasion. In the morning the order of service was—Hymn (processional), "The church's one foundation" (S. S. Wesley); Venite (Thorley); Psalms (Hodges, Goldwin, and Stainer); Te Deum (Mornington); Benedictus (J. T. Mew); Anthem, "O praise the Lord" (Goss); Hymn before the sermon, "Ye boundless realms of joy" (Darwell); Hymn (recessional), "O happy band of pilgrims" (harmonized by Kocker). The singing generally was marked by great precision, and the rendering of the anthem may be mentioned as having been particularly meritorious. The Rev W. H. Nutter conducted, and Mr. Kinkee, of Lambeth, ably presided at the organ. The sermon was preached by the Bishop of Winchester. In the evening the Psalms were sung to chants by Barnby, Felton, and West; the Cantate to a chant by Troutbeck, and the Deus to a chant by Hopkins. The hymns were well selected, and as well sung. The success of the festival will, we should imagine, ensure its repetition next year.

St. Issey, Cornwall.—The interesting proceedings connected with the consecration of the new Parish Church, built through the energy of the Rev. C. N. Mann, vicar, terminated in a concert given in the school-room, on Thursday evening, the 27th July. The part-songs and solos were admirably sustained by Misses Martin, Coom, Lean, and other ladies and gentlemen, under the skilful baton of Mr. Robinson, organist of Kilston. The instrumental portion consisted of several solos on the pianoforte, and a fantasia for the violoncello, on Irish melodies, by Matys, executed by the Rev. E. Shuttleworth, which latter piece was enthusiastically encored. Notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, the room was crowded, and many were unable to gain admission.

Welshpool.—The re-opening of the Parish Church took place on Tuesday, the 15th ult., and was in every point of view successful and satisfactory. The large company, both of the clergy and laity, who were present at the various services, proved the great interest which was taken in the event by the constant attendants at the church, as well as by those who sympathize in all movements of this character. The service was full choral, the prayers, &c., being intoned by the Rev. K. B. C. Frith, senior curate of Welshpool. The sermon was preached by the Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, from Genesis xxviii. 17. Mr. Inglis Bervon, organist and choirmaster, presided with great ability at the organ, and the musical portion of the services reflected much credit personally upon that gentleman, and also upon the choir generally. Handel's Hallelujah Chorus was played whilst the congregation was leaving the church.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. C. Rowcliffe, of the choir of St. Marks, Goodman's-fields, Choirmaster to St. Botolph, Bishopsgate.——Herr Aurel de Ratti to South Hackney Parish Church (St. John of Jerusalem) E.——Mr. Edward Beswick to St. Paul's Church, Kersall, Manchester.——Mr. Charles B. "Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., have issued eight songs by Joseph Barnby, the words taken from a variety of sources. 'My Golden Ship,' with its frequent employment of a double pedal, its use of syncopation, and general form of expression is a reminder of M. Gounod. None the less, however, does the music demand praise as an effective setting of the words. By the way, there is an example of the hidden fifth in the last cadence of each verse, which Mr. Barnby may have intended, but against which the ear protests. 'The Wrecked Hope' has become more or less familiar by the singing of Mdlle. Drasdil; and therefore we need only endorse here a verdict of approval awarded by the public voice. As a simple setting of a simple rhyme its merits are great. 'The Rainy Day,' in which Mr. Barnby seeks to illustrate Longfellow's familiar words, hardly attains a like degree of success. Its cleverness cannot be disputed, but a less striking display of harmonic colour would have served the turn of verses which are forcible enough in themselves. Then we must entirely object to the pedal cadence at the end of the song as being out of character, and only suggestive of the prolongation of a 'voluntary' while the clergyman finishes his private prayers. 'The Rose and the Nightingale' affords another example of Mr. Barnby's skill, and scarcely less of his poetic feeling; but it also goes, with much else from his pen, to show that he has a tendency towards writing in what we account a forced and unnatural style. As regards incessant chromatics and restless tonality, this song looks like an example of Spohr when most Spohrish. Enharmonic progressions, double flats, and all the tools of the German master's craft are very good things in their way, but they should be sparingly used. In 'I sit alone' Mr. Barnby is far more natural, and correspondingly more successful. He gives eloquent, because unaffected, expression to his theme, and the result is a song capable of pleasing learned and unlearned in an equal degree. These remarks apply also to 'In Spring Time,' a little unsophisticated idyll, which might have been improvised by some rustic Phyllis, in the days when country maidens had the gift of melody, and shepherds trilled the oaten reed. Passing 'How fades the Light,' as presenting nothing worthy of special remark, we come to 'Forget me not,' the last of the set. In point of melody this song is charming, nor can much objection be made to the accompaniment, though Mr. Barnby has again used that quickly fatiguing and very cheap device—the double pedal. Here, however, as in most of the songs preceding, we observe a creditable desire to avoid the beaten track of English composers generally. That Mr. Barnby is not always fortunate in carrying out his purpose supplies no reason at all why the existence of his purpose should fail to obtain recognition and applause."—Daily Telegraph, July 24, 1871.

ANTHEMS.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO. beg to announce that they are now issuing in the octavo form, a series of Anthems by the greatest Modern Composers, principally selected from their extensive Catalogue, and also including new works of undoubted merit. The preference shown by the musical public for small Scores over the separate vocal parts, has been so marked as to warrant the publishers in anticipating a more than usually large circulation for the Edition.

The issue commenced with the new year, and will be continued in Weekly Numbers, at Twopence, Threepence, Fourpence or Sixpence each, according to their length.

Twenty-six Numbers will form a Volume, which will be published half-yearly.

Many of the best known and most favourite Anthems which have hitherto been only obtainable in the large and comparatively expensive Folio size, will thus be brought within the reach of all.

It is also intended to include in this series, Anthems by Ancient Composers, but these will always be issued in twenty-six consecutive numbers, so as to form a separate Volume.

The following Anthems are now in course of publication:—

Novello's Octavo Choruses.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.—To remove the heavy taxes upon musical knowledge which had for so long a period prevented the possibility of the dissemination of the works of the great composers amongst the people of this country, Mr. J. Alfred Novello, in the year 1846, commenced the issue of those cheap editions of the standard oratorios and other sacred compositions, which are now too well known by all classes to need a word of recommendation. For some years the choruses in the octavo editions of these works have been published separately, with an organ or pianoforte accompaniment, at an exceedingly cheap rate. Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., however, believe that the time has now arrived when they may still further help forward the good work which has already produced such glorious results; and they have resolved, therefore, upon reducing the price of the whole of the octavo choruses fully fifty per cent.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with PEDAL OBBLIGATO, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by DR. RIMBAULT. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 6 are now ready:—

No. 1. ZADOK THE PRIEST.
2. FROM THE CENSER.
3. WE NEVER WILL BOW DOWN.
4. HE GAVE THEM HAILSTONES.
5. SING UNTO GOD.
6. HALLELUJAH.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of HANDEL'S CELEBRATED CHORUSES arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of HANDEL'S CHORUSES for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

EXETER HALL.

THE ORATORIO CONCERTS.

Conductor, - - Mr. Barnby.

FOURTH SEASON, 1871-2.

The Directors of the "Oratorio Concerts" beg to announce that a Series of Ten Subscription Concerts will be given during the ensuing Season at EXETER HALL, when the following works will be performed.

BACH'S PASSION,
HANDEL'S MESSIAH, ISRAEL IN EGYPT, JEPHTHA, AND JUDAS MACCABÆUS,
HAYDN'S CREATION, and ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,
MENDELSSOHN'S ST. PAUL, HYMN OF PRAISE,
AND ELIJAH.

The Directors have much pleasure in stating that

has accepted engagements for the whole of these performances, and the Subscribers will therefore be enabled to hear this great artist in all those parts which, by his unequalled rendering, he has made peculiarly his own. The following eminent vocalists will also appear during the season :—

Mdme. CORA DE WILHORST,
Miss EDITH WYNNE,
Madlle. CORANI,
Mdme. PATEY,

Miss JULIA ELTON,
Madlle. DRASDIL.
Signor FOLI,
Mr. LEWIS THOMAS.

MR. SANTLEY.

The Members of the Orchestra will be selected, as heretofore, from the best instrumentalists in London: and the Chorus, which will be considerably augmented, will consist of Mr. Barnby's Choir, numbering altogether about

500 PERFORMERS.

One of the principal objects gained in the removal of the Concerts to Exeter Hall will be the securing of sufficient space in the Orchestra to admit of a perfect balance between the Band and Chorus. The Directors have also to announce that, in order to ensure the comfort of the audience, the whole of the seats have been, at a considerable cost, re-cushioned.

The following are the dates of the Concerts :—

1871. WEDNESDAYS, NOVEMBER 15, DECEMBER 6, DECEMBER 20.
1872. TUESDAYS, JANUARY 20, FEBRUARY 6, FEBRUARY 20, MARCH 5, MARCH 19
WEDNESDAYS, APRIL 10, APRIL 24.

Terms of Subscription :—Stalls (Reserved and Numbered), £3 3s.; Area and West Gallery (Reserved and Numbered), £2 2s.

Prices of Admission to each Concert :—Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Area and West Gallery (Reserved and Numbered), 5s.; Gallery, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Admission, 1s.

Subscribers Names received by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.; the principal Music-sellers; and at S. James's Hall, by Mr. Austin.

THE GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

By Henry C. Lunn.

If it were necessary to add anything to the many arguments in favour of the Three Choir Festivals already advanced in this journal, we might dwell at length upon the nature of the surroundings during the meeting as utterly distinct from those which characterise a town in its holiday attire on any other occasion. We have repeatedly in our travels unexpectedly walked into streets thronged with groups of the lowest class of betting-men from the metropolis, staking with frantic haste and eagerness upon the probable success of some favourite horse: we have at other times found it almost impossible to thread our way through busy crowds of those semi-official individuals attracted, either from duty or curiosity, by the periodical Assizes. But enter one of the Cathedral towns during the progress of a Three Choir Festival, and, although you will not perhaps encounter the same marks of heartfelt enthusiasm to be seen in Germany—where art is worshipped almost as a religion—no person can fail to be struck with the refined character of the rejoicings which meet him on every side. Across the principal thoroughfares lines of flags are suspended, and merry peals of bells are constantly ringing during the week: on the Cathedral green too, the scene is really beautiful, when during a brief interval in the morning performance, friends from all parts of the country meet for conversation and promenade, or are seen hurrying into the many houses hospitably thrown open for the occasion. The hotels are full—not of feverish and excited sportsmen, but of artists and art-lovers—and whatever may be said of the musical attractions of London being drawn so closely towards the Cathedral towns by the increased facility of communication, we know, and can affirm by experience, that very many residents in the country, including some of the best county families, have derived all their knowledge of the grandest sacred musical works through attendance at the Three Choir Festivals, and would cease to hear them were these meetings abolished.

The 148th meeting of the three choirs of Gloucester, Worcester and Hereford, this year held at Gloucester, commenced on Tuesday, the 5th ult. The engagements at the Festival, as far as the instrumentalists were concerned, were everything that could be desired; for assuredly much of the success of the music was mainly owing to the steady and experienced playing of the excellent artists forming the orchestra; but local interest was once more apparent in the selection of the vocalists; and although we have nothing whatever to say against either Miss H. R. Harrison or Miss Martell as promising singers, we contend, as we always have done, that a Musical Festival is not the place where the strength of débutantes should be tested. With regard to the choice of music, save that only one novelty was produced, not a word can be urged in complaint, whilst much, very much, may be said in admiration of the artistic feeling which prompted the performance of works but imperfectly, if at all, known to the best supporters of the Festival. Dr. Wesley is always in earnest; and however we may differ from him in opinion as to his power to hold a large body of executants firmly in hand—however we may disagree with him when he hurries forward the choruses of Handel, or drags those of Mendelssohn, we thoroughly believe that he reads the works according to his own conviction, and resolves to enforce his theory. Thus far then he braves criticism, and must be content to bear the consequences. But if, as we believe, we are indebted to him for the introduction of Bach's "Passion Music," how much must our thanks to him as an artist outweigh our strictures upon him as a conductor. At a time when the Three Choir Festivals are placed upon their trial, the sublime strains of Bach, illustrating as composer never before illustrated the sufferings of our Saviour, in the very Cathedral which sacred music has been said to "desecrate," will be the most decisive answer to any objections that can be urged—will prove more effectually the solemn and deeply religious nature of these performances—will plead more eloquently the cause of the widow and orphan, than all that could be written or preached on the subject by the most eminent authors or divines.

The morning service began at ten o'clock on the opening day of the Festival. That union is not always strength was fully proved by the manner in which the whole of the chanting was conducted; for, although perhaps each choir separately might have been thoroughly competent to the duty, certainly the three in combination produced a result by no means conducing to a feeling of devotion. Boyce's anthem, "O where shall wisdom be found?" was better sung; and favourable mention must be made of the excellent way in which Bach's Pedal Fugue in B minor was played by Dr. Wesley's pupil, Mr. J. K. Pyne. The sermon was preached by Canon Tinling, who took for his text part of the 1st verse of the 3rd chapter of Malachi, "The Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to His temple." No doubt the observations upon the performances about to take place in the Cathedral were thoroughly sincere; but we cannot think that the Rev. gentleman was fully justified in undertaking to preach the Festival sermon, unless he conscientiously believed in the beneficial effect of the Festival itself. There may be truth in his remarks as to the necessity of making these meetings more exclusively sacred—it may also be a question whether the custom of winding up the proceedings with a Ball should be adhered to; but on the very morning of the Festival, when it is well known that all the arrangements for the week are not only definitely settled, but published, an attack from the pulpit on the method upon which the meetings are conducted can do no possible good, and may have the effect of doing a vast amount of harm.

At one o'clock the first performance took place in the Cathedral, the attendance however being but scanty, mainly owing no doubt to the many attractions which were to follow. The first part consisted of Handel's overture to "Esther," the "Dettingen Te Deum," and Mendelssohn's Hymn, "Hear my prayer." The overture was well played, and formed an appropriate opening to the selection from the works of its composer which succeeded it. The "Te Deum" was unequally sung; but some of the choruses, especially "To Thee, Cherubim," and "Day by day we magnify Thee," brought out the fine tone of the choir with much advantage, the sopranos particularly distinguishing themselves in many portions where in more ambitious monster performances a very decided weakness has been perceptible. Most of the solos were effectively given, those by Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Lewis Thomas creating a marked effect upon the audience; and Miss Martell, to whom was assigned the contralto part, although perhaps scarcely satisfying those who believe that great works demand experienced singers, was as fairly successful as her most sanguine friends could have anticipated. The orchestra was everything that could be desired, the exacting and prominent trumpet parts receiving, as usual, ample justice from Mr. T. Harper. Mendelssohn's "Hear my prayer" is too beautiful a work to be attempted without very sufficient rehearsal with the principal vocalist. The chorus was wavering throughout; and although Madame Cora de Wilhorst, who sang the solo, took the utmost pains with the music, there was an obvious want of sympathy with the orchestra, a fact easily accounted for if, as we have heard, the part was only seen by her for the first time on the Sunday preceding the Festival.

The second part of the morning's performance was devoted to Handel's "Jephtha," which was given with Mr. Arthur Sullivan's excellent additional accompaniments, originally written when the composition was revived at the "Oratorio Concerts" in London. With such a band, chorus, and principal singers, this work should have gone better than it did. Some of the choruses were sung with precision and fervour, amongst which we may cite, "O God, behold our sore distress," but the music seemed strange to the choir, and although it might be said that the work was as well given as could be expected under the circumstances, we can scarcely hope that we shall be justified in raising our expectations on a future occasion whilst the circumstances remain unaltered. The solo parts were allotted to Madlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Signor Foli, all of whom were thoroughly efficient. It is almost superfluous to praise Madlle. Titiens' delivery of "Happy they," and the well known "Farewell, ye limpid springs," or to enlarge upon Madame Patey's impressive rendering of the air, "Scenes of horror," but the warmest commendation must be awarded to Mr. Vernon Rigby, who gave the whole of the trying tenor music, especially the recitative, "Deeper and deeper still," and air, "Waft her angels," with a truth of expression which materially raised him in the estimation of all his hearers. Signor Foli sang the bass recitatives with much intelligence, and Miss H. R. Harrison, (who made her first appearance), and Miss Martell were useful in the subordinate parts. The novelty of the evening performance in the Cathedral did not have the effect of attracting so large an audience as we expected; but those who were present were amply repaid, not only by the music, but by the beautiful appearance of the building lighted by gas jets, the whole of the nave being brilliantly illuminated. The programme comprised selections from Haydn's "Creation," and Handel's "Israel in Egypt," each a masterpiece of its composer, but presenting perhaps as strong a contrast in style as could possibly have been chosen. The comparatively straightforward and possibly more familiar music of Haydn, was much better executed by the choir than that of Handel. "The heavens are telling" and "Achieved is the glorious work" were well sung throughout, a greater attention to gradations of tone being observable in these than in any of the other choral pieces in the Oratorio. In the solo portion of the movement "The marvellous work," and the air "With verdure clad," Madlle. Titiens created a genuine effect; Madame Cora de Wilhorst gave "On mighty pens" with much success; and Mr. E. Lloyd in the two well-known solos "Now vanish" and "In native worth," thoroughly established himself as a conscientious and reliable exponent of high-class sacred music. Signor Foli and Mr. Lewis Thomas gave much importance to the bass parts, the former singing "Rolling in foaming billows," and the latter "Now heaven in fullest glory shone," with true appreciation of the composer's meaning. The selection from "Israel in Egypt," was given with the additional accompaniments supplied by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, upon the merits of which we have commented both on their performance at the Norwich Festival of 1866, and at the "Oratorio Concerts." The singing of the choral portion of this Oratorio was, as we have already said, most unequal. "He led them through the deep," was taken so fast that the passages could scarcely be executed; and, although other choruses were very much more satisfactorily given, the general effect was one of indecision, the worst fault perhaps to characterise a work, the massive grandeur of which is scarcely to be found in the whole range even of Handel's sacred compositions. The solos were entrusted to Madlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr Lloyd, Signor Foli and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The singing of the ladies in this work is too well known to need more than a passing eulogium; but it may be said that Mr. Vernon Rigby made a special feature of the air, "The enemy said;" that Mr. Lloyd gave the few recitatives assigned to him with good declamatory power; and that Signor Foli and Mr. Lewis Thomas produced the usual effect in the florid duet, "The Lord is a man of war."

Mendelssohn's Oratorio, "Elijah," drew a large audience to the Cathedral on Wednesday morning, and we have no hesitation in saying that the performance of this work was by far the best during the Festival. The part of the Prophet was sung by Signor Foli; and, although much of the music, as must have been previously known, was too high for him, he gave good effect to the principal solos, especially distinguishing himself in the duet with the Widow, and the expressive air, "It is enough." Madame De Wilhorst, who sang the soprano music in the first part, gave the scene with the Prophet with much religious fervour, and Mr. Bentham's delivery of the air, "If with all your hearts," proved that he has well studied sacred as well as operatic music, but he has yet to gain that confidence which long experience alone will give him. A good word must be said for Miss Martell, who, although better in the concerted music than in her solo "Woe unto them," evidenced the possession of good musical feeling in all she did, a fact which would no doubt have been more apparent had she not been placed in a false position by being in the company of such distinguished artists. The singing of Madlle. Titiens in "Hear ye, Israel," of Madame Patey in "O rest in the Lord," and of Mr. Vernon Rigby in "Then shall the righteous," was beyond all praise; and Miss H. R. Harrison, Mr. Hunt and Mr. Brandon lent efficient aid in some of the concerted pieces. The choruses were given with good effect; and several would we think have been re-demanded, had etiquette not forbidden any demonstration. But when the grand culminating point of the first part of the Oratorio had commenced—the stupendous chorus "Thanks be to God"—most of the Stewards, who up to this time had borne the music with praiseworthy composure, rose from their seats, set the doors of the Cathedral wide open, and beckoned the ladies out to lunch. At the risk of having our toes trodden on by indignant refreshment-seekers, we boldly kept our place; but the small minority of music-lovers had but a poor chance of stemming the tide after official authority had tacitly announced that the last piece was merely a choral voluntary to sing the people out. There can be little hope of securing the decorous attention of a Cathedral audience to an Oratorio, until those who hold recognised positions at the Festival see the necessity of setting a better example.

The performance on Thursday morning commenced with Bach's "Passion Music;" and if there be left any doubters of the magical effect of this grand work, upon listeners unaccustomed to what is termed the "severe school" of the great contrapuntist, we could wish that they had been present to witness the earnest and devout appearance of the audience—or rather of the congregation, for those who came but to hear remained to worship. It was evident that Dr. Wesley had bestowed much attention upon the preparation of this music; for, in spite of certain shortcomings which it is not necessary to specify, it certainly went on the whole tolerably well. The performance was interesting, too, on account of the steadiness with which the conductor adhered very closely to the score of Bach throughout, as nearly indeed as he could, seeing that some of the instruments originally employed are no longer in use. The choruses were exceedingly well sung, considering how unfamiliar they must have been to the majority of the singers; and we may especially instance "O man, thy heavy sin lament," with its wonderful florid contrapuntal passages against the chorale sustained by the sopranos, which was marvellously kept up by every division of the choir, notwithstanding the hazardous speed at which it was taken. No attempt was made to introduce variety of tone in the chorales; and as they were all accompanied by the organ and orchestra, although a certain effect was unquestionably lost, it was replaced by perhaps a more decided realisation of the singing of these tunes by the body of the congregation, as originally intended. The soprano solos were given by Madame Cora de Wilhorst, who fully proved that she had carefully studied the due expression of the words. In the air, "Jesus, Saviour, I am Thine," she was particularly effective, and won by the most legitimate means the good opinion of her hearers. Madame Patey's delivery of the pathetic solo "Have mercy" (with M. Sainton's excellent violin obbligato) was a model of expressive singing, and Mr. E. Lloyd materially enhanced the good opinion already formed of his powers, by the truly artistic manner in which he gave the whole of the trying tenor music. Signor Foli sang the words given in the original to our Saviour with thorough comprehension of their purport, and Mr. Brandon (of the Gloucester Cathedral Choir) gave much effect to the remaining bass solos. The second portion of the programme commenced with the Oratorio "Gideon," composed for the Festival by Mr. W. G. Cusins. The text of this work has been compiled from the Scriptures by the Rev. F. T. Cusins, M.A., with much judgment, but its proportions are so small that it can scarcely, we think, with justice be termed an Oratorio. It is, however, exceedingly dramatic, and gives ample scope for variety in the music. The principal characters are Gideon, an Israelitish Woman, an Israelite, an Angel, and a Prophet. We think that the effect would have been better had more importance been given to the character of Gideon; but, unless the work were moulded on a larger scale, this could scarcely have been effected without dispensing with much of the solo music for the other voices, and the temptation of giving prominence, even within a limited space, to soprano, contralto and tenor, is perhaps too great to be resisted. Mr. Cusins has, however, made excellent use of the means within his reach, and has worthily sustained his growing reputation as a composer. Passing over some obvious reminiscences, rather than plagiarisms, from the works of Mendelssohn and Gounod, we may at once say that "Gideon" is a composition of very decided merit. Throughout the Oratorio, the adaptation of the music to the words is remarkably happy, the harmonies although somewhat unduly forced in parts, are usually appropriate and carefully written, and the instrumentation shows an intimate knowledge of the resources of the orchestra Amongst the most prominent choral pieces we may instance the chorus "Help us, O God," in F minor, in which a well marked phrase given out by the tenors, with a triplet orchestral accompaniment, is effectively answered in turn by the other voices, the music throughout expressing with much fidelity the earnest supplication of the people of Israel. A fugal chorus, "Through God we shall do great acts," evidences the composer's faculty of grappling with the higher school of writing, and indeed contains more legitimate proof of power than the somewhat ambitious "Battle Chorus," which, with all its clever vocal and orchestral effects, scarcely seems as spontaneous as the choral pieces first named. The Chant "Lord, Thine arm" (occurring in the movement containing the "Triumphal March") a bold crotchet orchestral bass accompaniment running throughout, is highly dramatic; and much praise must be given to the vigorous final chorus, "O God, wonderful art Thou" (with its incidental soprano solo,) the contrapuntal writing being extremely good, and the instrumentation, although occasionally too noisy, showing a skilful and experienced hand. As the reason assigned for the non-production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's Oratorio "St. John the Baptist" (to which we gave publicity in the last number of the Musical Times) was that no baritone singer had been engaged for the Festival, it appeared strange to us when we found that one of the principal parts of Mr. Cusins's composition had been written for this very voice; and, although it is true that Mr. Lewis Thomas, who sang the music is not a baritone but a bass, we could not help thinking that if he sang out of his compass in one work, he could have done so in another. This, however, by the way; and we have now only to express our unqualified admiration of the manner in which Mr. Thomas aquitted himself of his task. In the scene with the Angel, "Alas, O Lord God" (the soprano part of which was finely sung by Madlle. Titiens) his interpretation of the music was in the highest degree effective; and the air, "Though I am sometime afraid," although constantly kept upon the highest notes of his voice, was given with just expression and good intonation. Madlle. Titiens took the utmost pains with the air "The Lord, He it is," which is extremely melodious, and certainly one of the best written solos in the work. We should prefer the contralto air, "The righteous shall rejoice," to the one commencing "The eyes of the Lord" (both excellently given by Madame Patey) were we not constantly reminded of its similarity to Mendelssohn's "O rest in the Lord," a resemblance which was perhaps made additionally manifest to the audience from the effect created by the same singer in the air from "Elijah" on the previous morning. The two tenor solos, "O remember not," and "O sing unto the Lord," were given in Mr. Rigby's best style, the first named air affording good opportunity for expressive cantabile singing, and the second, with its preliminary impressive recitative, enabling this rising tenor to display to great advantage his declamatory powers. The dramatic feeling of the Oratorio was sustained with a care which we should like to see exercised in the performance of other works; for the music of the two Angels was sung by Miss H. R. Harrison and Miss Martell, and the single recitative, "Thus saith the Lord God," assigned to the Prophet, by Mr. Brandon, the principal characters being thus left to retain their individuality throughout. No praise can be too great for the manner in which the choruses were rendered; every point was attacked with a vigour which, although no doubt partly owing to Mr. Cusins's precision in conducting, reflected the greatest credit upon the choir. The orchestra too was thoroughly efficient, and a good word must be said for the harp playing of Mr. John Thomas, which contributed greatly to the effect in the highly dramatic instrumental piece which precedes the duet, "Alas! O Lord God," already mentioned. The success of the Oratorio was most decisive with the audience, for although applause is necessarily disallowed in a Cathedral, murmurings of gratification are not to be repressed; and we have but little doubt that in a secular building in the metropolis, Mr. Cusins will shortly have an opportunity of hearing this silent satisfaction translated into distinctly audible marks of approval. "Gideon" was followed by a short selection from Spohr's "Calvary," including the overture, the soprano air with chorus, "Though all thy friends" (solo by Madlle. Titiens), the beautiful trio, "Jesus, Heavenly Master" (by Madlle. Titiens, Miss Martell, and Madame Patey), and the two choruses, "Gentle Night" and "Beloved Lord."

Little need be said of the performance of the "Messiah" on Friday morning. The principal parts were sustained by Madlle. Titiens, Madame de Wilhorst, Miss H. R. Harrison, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Signor Foli and Mr. Lewis Thomas. How all the eminent artists named acquitted themselves in this familiar music must be tolerably well known to the public; and, although Miss Harrison in "He shall feed His flock" almost came to a standstill, it is but fair to say that the fault rested not with her. The choruses on the whole were well sung, "And He shall purify," and "All we like sheep," being perhaps the most noteworthy. The Cathedral was very full.

We were glad to find that a praiseworthy attempt was made to introduce good music at the secular concerts at the Shire Hall. On Wednesday evening a selection from Handel's "Acis and Galatea" was given, the principal features in which were "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir," "As when the dove," and "Heart the seat of soft delight," by Madlle. Titiens; "Love in her eyes" (finely given by Mr. Vernon Rigby), and "O, ruddier than the cherry," in which Mr. Lewis Thomas managed to create a decided effect without singing the high G at the end, according to the pattern set by Mr. Santley. Some of the choruses went well, but the finest of all "Wretched lovers," was marred by being taken too fast. After a violin solo, on airs from "Faust," brilliantly played by M. Sainton, and deservedly applauded, the second Finale of Spohr's much neglected opera "Azor and Zemira" was given with good effect by Madlle. Titiens, Miss H. R. Harrison, Miss Martell, Mr. Vernon Rigby and Mr. Lewis Thomas. A selection from Weber's Gipsy Operetta, "Preciosa," followed, and the rest of the concert was made up of the usual materials. At the second concert, on Thursday evening, the programme commenced with a selection from Mozart's "Le Nozze di Figaro," including amongst other pieces the overture, "Pórgi amor" and "Dove sono" (Madlle. Titiens) "Non so più" and "Voi che sapete" (Madame de Wilhorst), and "Non più andrai" (Signor Foli) all of which were sung with much effect. The Sestett "Sola, sola," from "Don Giovanni" (by Madlle. Titiens, Madame de Wilhorst, Miss H. R. Harrison, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Lewis Thomas, and Signor Foli) concluded the first part. Mozart's "Jupiter Symphony" was the great orchestral feature of the second part, and was received by the audience with a warmth which we have rarely seen exhibited on the performance of a classical piece at a Three Choir Festival Concert. Miss Agnes Zimmermann's execution of Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante in E flat created an equal amount of enthusiasm, and she was compelled to return to the platform to curtsey her acknowledgments. After a number of miscellaneous vocal pieces, the concert concluded with the National Anthem, which as usual, was about the worst executed composition of the evening.

We have but a few words to add in conclusion. The special character of these Festivals, as we have already said, must always make them welcome, not only to the many residents of the neighbourhood, but to those who are accustomed to hear the finest sacred works performed in the close concert-rooms of the metropolis. Yet it behoves all in authority to remember that the meetings are no longer country gatherings in aid of a Charity, but great musical performances, the merits of which are openly and widely criticised. Neither want of preparation for the due presentation of the works given, nor the singing of inexperienced artists in any portion of them, will therefore now be tolerated; and we are proving our warmest interest in the success of the Festivals, when we express a hope that these truths will be taken to heart in the future. The example set at Hereford, and followed this year at Gloucester, of having an evening performance in the Cathedral affords undoubted proof of the growing desire that the character of the Festivals shall become more decisively sacred. The necessity of having vocalists more especially suited to sing a few popular songs at the secular concerts gives a show of reason for the employment of their services occasionally in the Cathedral; but were such performances abolished, the best interpretation of the Oratorios would be the sole object in view; and this deepening of the religious feeling would, we believe, not only aid the cause of charity, but raise the tone of the Festivals, and give them a more solid claim to be regarded as a permanent institution of the country.

With the exception of "Gideon," which was directed by the composer, Dr. Wesley conducted the whole of the performances, Mr. Townshend Smith and Mr. J. K. Pyne presided at the organ, and Mr. Done at the pianoforte. We believe that the entire proceeds of the Festival will be about £1000; but a smaller amount than usual was collected at the Cathedral doors. The exertions of the Stewards have been most praiseworthy in the cause; and to those few with whom we were brought into contact, as well as to the indefatigable Secretary, Mr. J. H. Brown, we publicly tender our hearty thanks for the many courtesies which we received at their hands.

THE PASSION-PLAY AT OBER-AMMERGAU.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

After the Beethoven Festival at Bonn, of which I sent you an account last month, I made the best of my way to Munich, travelling through the whole of one night from Frankfort and arriving about nine or ten the next morning. Hearing that Wagner's "Tannhäuser" was to be performed that evening, I lost no time in procuring a place; and setting off a little before six (the hour of commencing), I had just time to settle down in my seat when the first notes of the overture were heard. I shall not easily forget the effect this fine music had upon me, nor the astonishment with which I found exquisite beauty where I had been taught to look for ugliness, and symmetry where deformity had been expected. I cannot help thinking that when we shall be fortunate enough to have an adequate representation of this great work in London, much of the misconception that now exists respecting the "music of the future" must disappear. Early the following morning the train started for Weilheim, the nearest railway point to Ober-Ammergau. The line runs through the most beautiful country, and charming glimpses are caught of the Bavarian Alps, with their snow-capped summits. For some distance also it passes along the side of a lake of considerable beauty, the shores of which are quite gay with innumerable villas belonging to the wealthier classes of Munich. Arrived at Weilheim, we (for I had picked up friends) rapidly selected the best of a motley collection of vehicles, and set out on the long but exceedingly picturesque drive into the very heart of the mountains now directly in front of us. Our journey first lay through a tract of country which, by its velvet-like turf and fine ornamental timber, was almost an exact counterpart of the private park of an English nobleman, though, oddly enough, here and there were patches which had been dug up and planted with vegetables or grain, quite in the middle of the beautiful stretches of turf, and without the faintest sign of either hedge or ditch to soften the apparent incongruity.

Soon after passing Murnau, the half-way town, the ascent of the mountains commenced, and so steep was the climb in some parts of the road, that both drivers and passengers had to alight, and large relays of horses had been provided to assist in dragging the vehicles up the pass, whilst the pedestrians were made aware then—if they had never known it before—what mountain climbing was.

It was evening before we perceived any indications that we were approaching our destination, though such indications soon became numerous enough. Vehicles of every conceivable description were now overtaken, slowly wending their way to the one point, their occupants being hardly less remarkable, in the matter of dress and general appearance, than the crazy-looking carts and waggons they were packed in. It was not long before we drove into Ober-Ammergau, and as we had not previously taken lodgings or even places for the play, our consternation was great upon finding considerable crowds of people blocking up every avenue. Signs of a coming storm made matters look all the worse. After trying to obtain lodgings at half the houses in the village with a discouraging want of success, we settled upon the desperate resolve of spending a night in the carriage that had brought us, when one of our party arrived with the welcome news that he had succeeded in engaging a room and getting places for the play. It was not a whit too soon, for we were scarcely housed when the storm burst with tremendous fury and raged far into the night.

As our tickets were not numbered it was necessary we should be up early in the morning for the purpose of getting good places. So, taking a day's provisions, we started about half-past six, and eventually succeeded in securing capital seats.

The stage was now before us with its centre proscenium, two small wings with practicable doors and balcony, flanked by two large openings representing streets in Jerusalem, and return sides. It has been so often described lately as to need no further description now. Equally has the theatre itself been the subject of various drawings in the illustrated journals.

After we had taken our seats, and the novelty of being in an open-air theatre had somewhat worn off, a feeling crept over me which I have no doubt has previously been experienced by many under the same circumstances. A representation was about to take place of the most tremendous events in the history of the world. Not only was our Lord to be personated, but He was to be represented in the most solemn acts—the institution of the Last Supper, the Agony in the Garden, the Death, Burial, Resurrection, and Ascension: all were to be done—and by whom? By common farm-labourers, woodcutters, and the like. Every one has formed his own ideal of these great Scriptural events, and I, necessarily, like the rest. Was my ideal going to be elevated or lowered by this peasant representation? It seemed impossible to be the former, and if the latter, what a terrible thing to have the depressing influence of such a thing constantly in your recollection, and feel that your highest spiritual impression has become permanently debased! These and other like reflections were interrupted by the entrance of the members of the orchestra, of whom the greater part seemed to play brass instruments of various kinds, the remainder of the band appearing to be made up of strings and two flutes. As the time for commencing drew near, the audience gradually became more silent, and showed plainly by their manner with what seriousness they looked forward to the coming performance. A few moments more and the musical conductor quietly took his seat, and in response to his sign the Overture commenced. A few quiet, solemn chords, reminding the musician strongly of the earlier symphonies of Haydn, were soon followed by an Allegro of a brighter character, yet still full of simple, quaint, and tender feeling—these characteristics clinging to the music throughout the entire Play. The Overture concluded, there was a moment's pause, when from each of the side wings of the stage advanced a number of persons of the most picturesque appearance imaginable. Each is dressed in a long skirt which envelopes the whole figure, over this is a white tunic reaching to the knee, edged with lace, and over the whole is a mantle of a deep rich colour, falling in artistic folds across from the right shoulder where it is fastened. A small gold fillet encircling the head completes the costume. But if the dress of the chorus was remarkable, much more so was the singular beauty of feature and expression of rapt devotion that characterised the faces of these, and indeed every person who took part in the Play. In short, the appearance of the members of the chorus, as they slowly walked in two lines from the opposite sides of the stage and met in the centre, was most impressive. Forming a semicircle, they slowly faced the audience, and after a few introductory notes from the orchestra, the choir-leader—an exceedingly imposing looking man—extending his arm, commenced the Prologue in recitative. After some time the other members of the chorus, who had remained perfectly still, their hands reverently crossed on the breast, with a simple gesture full of dignity, broke in upon the recitative with a chorus in four-part harmony. The effect was perfectly thrilling. At the conclusion of the chorus, which was explanatory of the scenes to come, the singers divided and fell back on each side, the curtain drew up, and the first set scene was displayed, illustrating the expulsion of Adam and Eve from Paradise. During the exhibition of this scene a concerted movement was sung by the chorus, and when the curtain fell, the principal member of the chorus again proceeded to explain the connection between the Type and Antitype. After this, they slowly left the stage.

The moment had now arrived when the Christus was to appear, and a look of almost painful anxiety was on every countenance. The curtain drew up and disclosed an empty stage. Presently, shouts, proceeding apparently from a great distance, were heard, waxing louder as they seemed to come nearer, when one or two persons appeared at the doors of the houses in the side scenes, as though to ascertain what the uproar meant; ere long the head of a procession appeared, and soon the whole stage was filled by a shouting, excited multitude of men, women, and children—some of the latter being little more than infants. Louder and louder swelled their Hosannas, when the object of all this tumultuous rejoicing "meek, and sitting upon an ass," rode in, accompanied by His twelve disciples. Surely there was not a heart in all that audience, that did not beat fast as the eye rested for the first time upon that pale, sad face, apparently wearied unto death with the weight of "the sins of all the world." Slowly dismounting from the ass, He, after a few words to His disciples, enters the Temple, and finds traders there carrying on their impious traffic. He upbraids them, and with a simple dignity, impossible to describe, overthrows their money-tables, and drives them with thongs from the place. After speaking a few words to the people, He withdraws with the disciples, and the curtain falls. This ended the first of the seventeen divisions of the Play. The chorus now re-entered, and the Type and Antitype followed in due course, and in the same order as already described; the two succeeding scenes in the the council-chamber being wonderfully realistic. The third division, the parting of our Lord from His mother, was one of the most touching of all, the whole audience, both men and women, being affected to tears. The fourth division was taken up chiefly by the arrangement between Judas and the Priests for the betrayal of Christ. The fifth division, showing our Lord washing His disciples' feet, was also very remarkable. It was done with such a marvellous grace and dignity that, although the act was thoroughly completed and occupied considerable time, there was no sense of monotony or weariness produced. The following division represented our Lord on Mount Olivet. The disciples fall asleep, whilst the Saviour, bending to the ground, prays aloud three times; at the third time the angel appears strengthening Him. Immediately following this was the scene of the Betrayal. Then came the examinations before Annas, the High Priest, and Caiaphas and the Council; the mocking and buffeting—the latter done with an amount of realism almost too painful to witness; the suicide of Judas; the trial before Pilate, and afterwards Herod; the scourging of Jesus; the investiture with the kingly robe, sceptre, and crown of thorns—a scene which, from its intense reality, was most harrowing to the feelings; the last trial before Pilate—the Virgin Mother being present—ending with His condemnation to death.

Then succeeded the scene of the Via crucis: our Lord, sinking beneath the weight of the Cross, and dragged hither and thither by the brutal soldiery, who hail every stumble with shouts of execration and mockery. Simon, the Cyrenian, is however compelled to bear the cross, when our Lord turns to the weeping women, and addresses them in those touching words, "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for Me, but weep for yourselves and for your children." The Blessed Virgin with St. John and the Magdalene follow at a distance.

And now, as the great scene of the Redemption draws near, the chorus appears attired in mourning. The principal member no longer sings his recitative, but speaks it with an instrumental accompaniment of a mournful character. The curtain then rose upon the scene of the Crucifixion. The three crosses are there. Those on which the two thieves are hanging are already in an upright position. The centre one still lies upon the earth, and upon it rests the figure of our Lord. This is shortly raised and fixed into the ground, during which process the figure drags heavily downward, to all appearance the nails in the hands being the only support. Then the soldiers begin to part His garments between them, and cast lots for the seamless coat. The Blessed Virgin with St. John and the Magdalene now approach the cross, and our Lord utters the words, "Woman, behold thy son." Soon follows the cry, "Eloi, eloi, lama sabacthani," which is answered by derisive shouts and laughter from the soldiers. Again He speaks, "I thirst;" and the sponge filled with vinegar is coarsely pressed to His mouth, and quietly rejected. Then with His last parting breath He sighs "Father, into Thy hands I commend My spirit." Immediately terrible sounds of earthquake succeed, and fear and horror are depicted in every face. Many of those who mocked and reviled Him rush from the scene, whilst a priest arrives and breathlessly announces the rending of the veil of the temple. The soldiers, however, untouched by these fearful visitations, proceed to break the legs of the two malefactors, and are approaching the body of our Lord when the Magdalene passionately calls their attention to the fact that He is already dead, and defends His Body from their touch; the Centurion, however, with a spear pierces His side, from which flow blood and water; the body is then taken down from the Cross.

A most vivid pourtrayal of the succeeding events in the history of our Lord follows, viz., the Entombment, the Resurrection, and the Ascension; the latter scene bringing this wonderful drama to a close.

Little remains to be added, except to record one or two general impressions. First as to the acting. From the principal character down to the members of the chorus, the power, grace and appropriateness of action exhibited by each would have suggested that all the theatres in Europe had been ransacked for actors for this play but for one fact. Not once through the whole day did a stage trick exhibit itself. All was perfectly natural. A matter equally astonishing was the manner in which each actor reproduced the conventional appearance of the character he represented, without the use of false hair, beard, or any theatrical arrangements. But most remarkable of all is the fact that the six hundred people who take part in these performances all belong to Ober-Ammergau—a village of only one thousand inhabitants. Perhaps the least satisfactory part of the play was the music. The orchestra—though much better than might have been anticipated in such a place—was by no means perfect. Nor were any of the voices in the chorus at all remarkable—perhaps with the exception of one soprano. It should be mentioned, however, that in addition to many other advantages pertaining to the Christus, his speaking voice is one of the most beautiful and characteristic I ever heard.

To those who are disposed to doubt the advantage of seeing such a performance, I can say with truth, that had the representation come in the slightest degree below the high ideal I had formed in my own mind, the effect upon me would have been disastrous. But, on the contrary, it was higher. And to such as might imagine that a representation of certain historical facts—in a language not clearly understandable, would prove uninteresting, I have only to say that, so intensely enthralling was it to me, that from the time of taking my seat—a quarter before seven in the morning—to the time of my leaving it—five o'clock in the afternoon—I had no notion whatever of the passing of time. And had there been nothing else to be said in favour of this Play, the fact that nearly six thousand persons of all nationalities and nearly all shades of religious opinion, met on the ground of their common Christianity, to witness and be deeply moved by a representation of the Redemption of mankind, could hardly fail to be an advantage in these days of sectarian intolerance.

Mr. Barnby's connection with the Church of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, as Organist and Director of the Choir, has ceased.

We are informed that Mr Horton C. Allison has just completed the composition of a new Oratorio entitled "Prayer," the words of which are taken from St. Matthew's Gospel.

The St. George's Glee Union gave its monthly private concert on Friday the 1st ult. at the Pimlico Rooms, under the direction of the Conductor of the Society, Mr. W. H. Bridges. The most successful of the concerted pieces were "'Twas on a bank" (Hullah), "Oh My Luve's like a red, red rose" (Garrett), "My lady is so wondrous fair" (Calkin), "The Two Roses" and "The Joy of the Mead Cup," all of which were excellently rendered. The most effective of the solos were "The Sailor's Story" (Smart), and "L'Ardita" (Arditi), charmingly sung by Miss Horder, "Blow high, blow low," by Mr. Redman, a selection from "Zampa," well played on the Concertina by Mr. Williams, and Schulhoff's "Galop de Concert," and "Rosellen's first Reverie," brilliantly executed on the piano by Mr. Otto Hoz. Altogether this was one of the most enjoyable open meetings ever given by this prosperous Society.

Sir Julius Benedict's Oratorio "St Peter" is to be performed, under the direction of the composer, at the Norwich Festival next year, and it will also be given at the approaching series of concerts, organised by Mr. Kuhe, at Brighton.

On the 31st August a new chancel which has just been built to the Parish Church of Windermere, was consecrated by Dr. Goodwin, the Bishop of Carlisle, and on the same occasion a new organ of two manuals, by Wadsworth, of Manchester, was successfully inaugurated by Dr. Spark, of Leeds, whose playing at the service, and also at a subsequent Recital, afforded much gratification. The Bishop preached to a large congregation, and took his text from Luke xiv. 23—"Compel them to come in that my house may be filled." In the course of his remarks the preacher said, "There is just one other point connected with the service to which I think it may be well to call your attention. It is that in which the clergyman has much less to do, and in which the people can take part to their hearts' content—the musical portion. Do not think I insist too much upon the externals of musical accompaniments to the service when I argue for the value of good music. I cannot enter upon the question now, but I must say that the service of the Church of England is essentially a musical service, that the Book of Common Prayer is essentially a musical book, and that if we reduce the glorious service which the Reformation provided us to the bare, cold, unmusical skeleton to which it has sometimes been reduced, we do an injustice to the Prayer Book, to the Reformation, and to those of our brethren who are only too willing to make excuse. Do not let us allow all the fascinations of song to be monopolised by the world, the flesh, and the Devil. I recommend nothing beyond the bounds of good taste and sound judgment. But I do believe that of all the compulsions that can be brought to bear upon those who are inclined to make excuses, the compulsion of a musical hearty service is among the most successful."

The last public rehearsal of the North London Sacred Harmonic Society was held on Tuesday, the 5th ult., "Samson" being the Oratorio selected. The principal singers were Mrs. Broad, Miss Purssey, Miss Bent, Mr. H. Perry, and Mr. Froome, who all acquitted themselves very creditably, especially Mrs. Broad in "Let the bright Seraphim," and the two gentlemen in the duet, "Go, baffled coward." The orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Bent, elicited well-deserved applause, particularly in the "Dead March." The choruses were sung with remarkable precision. Mr. James Boyce conducted.

A Concert in connection with the City Vocal Union was held at the large schoolroom, Friar Steeet, Carter Lane, on Monday, the 18th ult. The principal vocalists were Misses Mills, White, Ford, Dean, Heaviside, Rhodes, and Genery; Messrs. Daintree, Marsh, Innes, Morgan, Lewsey, and Elliott. The choral music was exceedingly well given; and amongst the most successful of the quartets was "Since first I saw your face," by the Misses White and Genery; Messrs. Morgan and Marsh. A solo by Mr. Elliott, called "Wrecked and Saved," was much applauded. Mr. George Wells conducted, and Mr. T. M. Clark was the accompanist.

Cathedral Services by George M. Garrett, Mus. Doc. Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur, in E flat (No. 7).

Notwithstanding the fact that all Churchmen rejoice specially in the use of the essentially Christian Hymns, the "Magnificat" and "Nunc Dimittis," yet the "Cantate Domino" and "Deus Misereatur," common to Jews as well as Christians, are none the less edifying as songs of praise, and are doubly welcome as forming a striking contrast to the Evangelical Hymns. Nothing can be more difficult to set to music than the "Cantate Domino" split up as it is into a vast number of short and partially disconnected sentences, on each of which the composer would fain expend his time and elaborate his themes, but which he is compelled to pass rapidly over, in order to avoid extending his work beyond the time ordinarily allotted to the Canticles. On the one hand there is the danger of making no variety at all; on the other, the danger of presenting to the hearer a long string of ill-matched, detached subjects, none of which are worked as they deserve. Dr. Garrett seems to have wisely steered a middle course; there is plenty of variety in his phrases, and they reflect well the spirit of the words, yet he has succeeded in keeping up an unity of style and leaving the impression, that it is the work of one mind, and not, as many, or most of our Cantates appear to be—a pasticcio. There is much novelty both of progression and modulation, which will be better liked on the second hearing than the first. The Deus Misereatur does not present to the composer the same difficulties as the Cantate Domino, so, as we might expect from such an experienced hand, the whole is smooth, graceful, and good. These services fully sustain the reputation which their predecessors in the keys of D and F have already made.

Cathedral Services by G. M. Garrett, Mus. Doc. The Office of the Holy Communion (No. 9).

This is a complete collection of the music required for this office; it contains a setting of "Glory be to Thee, O Lord," and "Thanks be to Thee, O Lord"; an offertory (Blessed is the man), and Sursum Corda, besides those parts ordinarily published. The "Kyrie Eleison" is melodious, and, as it ought to be (but seldom is), somewhat penitential in style. But in choosing for it the key of B flat minor, ending on the dominant (F major), Dr. Garrett has overlooked the probable pitch of many a chanter's voice. As it stands, he can only chant on F, for B flat as the reciting-note would be too high, as well as a most unpleasant sequence to a chord of F. The Creed is highly dramatic, and in it the powers of the organ are utilized with great skill. The offertory would be effective in its place, or out of its place as an independent anthem. The "Sanctus" is most impressive, and for excellence of æsthetical design, surpasses any portion of the service. The "Gloria in Excelsis," a hymn which must inspire musical thoughts to every musical thinker, has received ample justice from the author, in his own style. The whole Office will require a very careful performance, but will be found well worth it.

A Morning and Evening Service. Composed by S. P. Tuckerman.

A setting of the Canticles which exhibits novelty of treatment is still somewhat rare; and therefore when it is found, combined with other necessary advantages, it deserves commendation. Mr. Tuckerman's Service displays considerable talent. The composer has evidently set himself the task of honestly illustrating the words and varying phrases without reference to the style of any particular period. But in spite of himself the influence of the old English school of church writers occasionally asserts itself, and the genuine cathedral commonplace breaks out more than once. Where, however, there is so much that is new and good, it would be unjust to dwell upon the few short-comings. The Service is likely to assist in carrying on the movement in favour of greater freedom in the style of church compositions, and if it did no more it would be welcome.

Nine Hymns. Set to music by C. Maxted.

A word of approval is due to the composer of these tunes, as much for the graceful melody he has given us as the genuine feeling he displays for harmony. The only fault that can be urged against the compositions is a certain degree of restlessness. With a little more sobriety and fewer passing notes, some of these tunes would be charming. We would counsel Mr. Maxted by all means to continue writing.

If ye then be risen with Christ. Full Anthem for four voices. Composed by John Naylor, Mus. Bac.

There is more freshness and vigour in the treatment of the subjects of this Anthem, than there is originality in the subjects themselves. As a whole it is certainly good, and would be very effective. One or two defects ought, however, to be pointed out; we live in an age when we are allowed even by contrapuntists, to accent our words properly; it is unfortunate therefore that Mr. Naylor gives the whole force of the down-beat to the the in the sentence, "At the right hand of God." Such an accent is at least two centuries out of date. The bass part lies rather too high in many places for such voices as are found in ordinary choirs. Second-rate basses might make a good shot to the high E flat (on page 3) from the F below, but should they fail, Mr. Naylor's music will suffer severely. This Anthem promises so well, that we hope soon to see more from the same pen.

The Lord is my Shepherd. Sacred Song, for Baritone or Contralto voice. Words from Psalm xxiii, verses 1, 2 and 4. Music by J. Miles Bennett.

A smoothly written and appropriately harmonised song, which we can unhesitatingly recommend to any baritone or contralto vocalist who can sing words with expression. Mr. Bennett has given a sacred character to his music in excellent sympathy with the words he has selected; and we cannot too much commend the musicianlike manner in which the whole of the accompaniments are written.

Original Compositions for the Organ, by Henry Smart. Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13.

Mr. Smart's promise of a series of compositions for the organ is rapidly being fulfilled; and many who are waiting for further contributions will be delighted to find that the present numbers are just as elegant, melodious, and useful, as any of those that preceded them. Nos. 7, 8, and 9 contain six short and easy pieces—two in each number—short and easy 'tis true, but not to be despised on that account by those who consider themselves capable of attacking works long and difficult. The first of those in No. 7, is a sweet morceau of a capital length for general purposes, in the key of D, each of the two themes being introduced on a pedal-point. The second in No. 7 is a very model of beauty, simple enough for a child, and yet full of sweet suggestions to a practised musician. The smooth running passage added to the first theme on its re-appearance is exceedingly happy in its effect. Neither of these pieces adhere rigidly to a common form. The second theme of No. 1 occurs on both occasions in the dominant, and the second theme of No. 2 is (alas!) heard but once. These deflections from habitual outline are however deserving of imitation by other writers. Of the two short pieces (Nos. 3 and 4 of the six) contained in No. 8, the first in A major is of that pastoral time ($\frac{6}{8}$) and character, which is so well adapted to inspire a proper frame of mind to those present at the services of the Church. This is somewhat more elaborated than the two preceding "short pieces," being in Sonata form in all its integrity. The re-entrance of the first theme (after the first inversion of the chord of B flat) is most ingenious

"PERFECT CHECK REPEATER" ACTION

PIANOFORTES.

Sir Julius Benedict.—"This most ingenious and invaluable invention cannot fail to meet with success."

Sydney Smith.—"The touch is absolute perfection."

The Standard, Sept. 13, 1869.—"This invention has received the greatest approbation everywhere of musicians and manufacturers."

Morning Post.—"The touch is beautifully light, and the repetition instantaneous."

Echo, Jan. 2, 1871.—"Perfect in every respect."

The Court Circular, July 17th, 1869.—"Not only is the tone produced by these means delightfully sweet and sustained, but it gains most considerably in power—a small pianoforte, with this invention, having the power of an ordinary grand."

The Engineer, July 2, 1869.—"The absence of complication gives a lightness and elasticity to the touch that lend a new charm to it; whilst its simplicity ensures its keeping in order, and wearing far longer than ordinary ones."

Musical Times, June 1, 1869.—"So important an improvement is of the utmost importance to pianists."

The Era, Jan. 31, 1869.—"By this patent the greatest possible advantages are secured to the performer."

The Queen, May 15, 1869.—"This invention is simplicity itself, and more nearly approaches perfection than anything which has preceded it."

and pleasing. The other piece of this number is very simple and plaintive, but solemn and effective. The two pieces in No. 9 are both adapted for short concluding voluntaries, being for the full organ and in a spirited style. These three numbers—7, 8, and 9,—containing the six short and easy pieces, are as valuable a contribution to an organist's portfolio as any of the more elaborate works of the series. No. 10 consists of an air with variations closing with a "Finale fugato." Like other airs varied, it is well adapted for the exhibition of the ear-tickling solo stops of a good organ, and must have made a sensation when played by Mr. Best at the opening of the organ in the Albert Hall. In Nos. 11, 12, and 13 we again enter upon a series of short and easy pieces, but this time the pieces are shorter and easier than the previous series (in Nos. 7, 8, and 9), the whole of the twelve occupying but three numbers. The third and fourth (in No. 11) are sure to please, the sixth (in No. 12) a "quasi pastorale" is exceedingly graceful, the eighth (in No. 13) is in the author's best style, and the Fughetta (No. 13) makes a solid and substantial close to the series. Masters of the instrument as well as students have to thank our great English composer—Smart, for these his valuable additions to a much neglected branch of musical literature.

Sonatina for the Pianoforte. Composed and dedicated to Little Players, by Berthold Tours.

We have separated this beautiful little Sonata from the other works of Mr. Tours which have been forwarded to us for review because we do not desire that it should form one of a list of the usual class of Pianoforte pieces which might fairly be dismissed with a passing word of welcome. Were the majority of compositions written for young players intended to form their style instead of to cover their want of it, Mr. Tours might simply take his place amongst the earnest workers in the cause of musical education; but when we consider the flimsy pieces upon which the fingers of those young ladies who learn "music" at school are as a rule employed, it becomes our duty to call the special attention of teachers to this unpretentious Sonatina, because it is through them that the "little players" to whom it is dedicated will most probably have it introduced to their notice. The first movement, in G major, is based on a charmingly fresh and playful melody, both hands being well employed throughout. The theme in E flat, played with the left hand and lightly accompanied with the right, is extremely melodious, and on the return to the original key there are some effective conversational bits leading into the opening subject. For the slow movement we have an elegant Romance in C major, the "Poco più animato" contrasting well with the first theme, and the whole forming an excellent study for expressive playing. The last movement is a well written March, with an effective second subject in the Dominant. The harmonies throughout are neither commonplace nor pedantic; and juvenile pianists will, we think, be pleased with the excellent effects which the composer has enabled them to gain by simple and legitimate means. Mr. Tours has earned the thanks of conscientious professors by the production of this Sonatina; and we shall be glad to see some more pieces cast in the same classical form from his pen.

Witches' dance, for the Pianoforte.
Dreaming. Sketch for the Pianoforte.
Ephéméron. Caprice-Etude, pour Piano.
Deux Esquisses (en forme de Danse) pour Piano.
Composed by Berthold Tours.

There is much character in the principal theme of the first of these pieces, but it must be played, as the composer has directed, lightly and with vivacity, the staccato being well marked with both hands. The second subject is extremely original—more perhaps in the treatment than the melody—but, like all Mr. Tours's compositions, the whole piece appeals more particularly to those who have trained themselves to the appreciation of something beyond mere tune. The return to the opening theme is highly effective. "Dreaming" has an appropriately tranquil subject, which is followed by a graceful melody in the Subdominant, flowing dreamily in quavers and harmonised with much skill throughout. The few expressive bars at the end of the piece are in excellent sympathy with its title. "Ephéméron" in the opening theme alternates strangely enough between the harmonies of the key-note and mediant (or third of the scale), and this we frankly say we do not like. Apart from this, there is much to admire in the composition, which is written with Mr. Tours's usual skill. As a study for touch it will be found extremely useful. The last two little sketches—en forme de danse—have much merit. No. 1 is a light and playful movement in E flat major, in which good use is occasionally made of a pedal bass. No misplaced modulations occur to perplex a player who expects simple music, variety being gained by change of character instead of change of key. No. 2, in G minor, ending with an unexpected major chord, has a very peculiar subject, in $\frac{3}{4}$ rhythm, commencing with a dotted minim for the first bar, and a triplet followed by two crotchet rests for the second. It is probable that many persons will play this over a great many times before they like it, but we believe in a favorable verdict upon intimate acquaintance. The second theme, in the tonic major, with a long key-note pedal, is melodious, and contrasts well with the quaint subject just referred to. Mr. Tours has shown much versatility in the composition of these pieces; and, although we should be inclined to question the advisability of the use of some harmonies for which he has an evident predilection, we would rather see him write from himself than feebly imitate others.

Tarantelle, pour Piano; par Siegfried Jacoby.

It is difficult indeed to write anything original in the Tarantella form, but agile pianists who wish for one of the latest specimens of this class of composition will find the one before us both brilliant and effective. The composer has, contrary to the usual custom, boldly resolved to keep his principal theme in the minor key throughout; and if, by so doing, his piece sounds somewhat monotonous, he has at least escaped the conventional trick of winding up in the major, the transitional effect of which is the secret of half the success which these dance tunes obtain.

Child Love. Words by Sadie. Music by Frederic N. Löhr.

When we say that Mr. Löhr has written an unpretentious melody to some unpretentious words, we have said much more than many imagine, for to be simple in music shows power, and not feebleness. There is no occasion to be childish when we write for children, but we must let them know that we sympathise with them—not by obviously condescending to their level, but by entering their own little world and sharing with them their joys and sorrows, Much of this feeling is shown in the song before us, which may be perhaps more spontaneous than the majority of vocal domestic works from the fact of its being dedicated to the composer's own little daughter. The legato phrases in the relative minor are exceedingly effective: and, without claiming any unduly high standard for the composition, we may conscientiously say that it is much better than many of the songs which have obtained a factitious importance through the pernicious "Royalty" system.

A Little Story; for the Pianoforte. Composed by Berthold Tours.

Highly finished sketches like this will do much towards forming the taste of young pupils to the due comprehension of more elaborate works. Mr. Tours never writes vaguely or diffusely; and in the piece before us we discover a definite design, in the interpretation of which an intelligent performer can scarcely fail to imagine some "little story," an idea which the composer wisely favours by refraining from putting any quotation which would betray what was passing in his own mind whilst he was writing the piece. A graceful melody is given out at the commencement, which is well contrasted by a very original theme in the relative minor. The re-appearance of the first subject, after an episode in the Dominant, is highly effective, and the manner in which it asserts its right to be heard in what may be considered as the coda of the composition shows an inventive power which is too rare to be disregarded. We recommend "A Little Story" with the utmost confidence both to teachers and performers as one of the best specimens of thoughtful little pieces that we have seen for some time.

CRAMER, WOOD AND CO.

Mendelssohn's First Concerto, in G minor, Op. 25. Arranged for the Pianoforte by J. Rummel.

OUR readers will know that we have always steadily advocated the arrangements of classical works for the Pianoforte, whatever instrument they have first been written for; and this we have done with the full conviction that although such translations can be of no service to artists who are acquainted with the originals, they will spread a love for the best compositions amongst many who, but for their being presented in this form, would scarcely perhaps even have heard of them. But recent experience has convinced us that amateurs must exercise extreme caution in selecting these transcriptions, for title-pages are not always to be relied upon. The piece before us, for instance, is said to be Mendelssohn's Concerto, in G minor, arranged for the Pianoforte, an announcement which certainly would not prepare any purchaser for the discovery that every movement is cut and hacked about at the mercy of the arranger, not only without any thought about the composer, but without very much as to how the shreds and patches hang together. The first and slow movements remind us of the novels occasionally to be found at sea-side libraries, where two or three pages have been torn out, and the reader is called upon to exercise his ingenuity in guessing the contents of the lost leaves. Mendelssohn lovers will of course throw aside such a piece as worthless, but it is because ignorant pupils under ignorant teachers are apt to be led astray by these arrangements, as they are termed, that, in the interest of true art, we feel bound to enter our protest against them.

ROBERT COCKS AND CO.

The Minstrel's Song. Composed for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards.

THIS piece is scarcely "composed for the Pianoforte," seeing that the theme is that of a song called "The Harp of Wales," by the same composer. Those who know the readiness with which Mr. Richards can throw off graceful passages all lying well under the hands of a pianist who has been carefully trained, will readily believe that, apart from the melodiousness of the subject which forms the groundwork of this composition, the skill with which the leading idea is treated will be certain to make the piece attractive for drawing-room performance. It may be said, too, that the title, "The Minstrel's Song," fully justifies the frequent use of the arpeggios and scales which are woven in with the air.

Gavotte and Rondo, from Bach's sixth Violin Sonata. Bourrèe, from Bach's fourth Sonata for the Violoncello. Transcribed by W. S. Rockstro.

BACH'S works must be in the ascendant in the present day, if we may judge by the number of pianoforte transcriptions of movements from his solos for stringed instruments which constantly come before us. If we are not mistaken, Miss Agnes Zimmermann had the honour of setting the fashion both of transcribing and playing these pieces: and a very good fashion it is: one moreover which will always do infinite credit both to the arranger and performer. The Gavotte from the sixth Violin Sonata has been recently noticed by us in a transcription by Mr. Berthold Tours, and we need only say that Mr. Rockstro has performed his task with much skill, rather perhaps favouring the desire to simplify the passages so as to make them available for the majority of amateurs. The Bourrée from the Violoncello Sonata is a movement which needs no eulogy from us to recommend it. Pianists will find it good, sterling music; and as the arranger has carefully fingered the most important portions of the piece in both hands, much of the difficulty inherent to this class of composition will be smoothed for pupils who are feeling their way without a master.

My Mother's Voice. Song. Poetry by G. Bennett. Not a Sparrow falleth. Sacred Song. Written by W. S. Passmore. Composed by Franz Abt.

THE title of the first of these songs will sufficiently show that it is of that domestic character the specimens of which scarcely require to be multiplied. The subject, however, is melodious and vocal, and some little variety of treatment in the harmonies—as, for instance, where the opening two bars of the theme, on their repetition, are taken into G minor, instead of remaining in F—lifts the composition above the mere ordinary ballads of the day. We like the sacred song better. The subject is full of feeling, and the harmonies are appropriate and carefully written throughout. After the "Poco più animato," a good effect is gained by the return to the original melody, with the arpeggio accompaniment, the left hand being crossed over the right for the chords on the half bar. An expressive singer may make this song highly attractive.

LEWIS AND WILLIAMS, CARDIFF.

The Masonic Ritual. Composed by Fred. P. Atkins, Mus. Bac., Oxon.

MR. ATKINS cannot surely have looked over his proofs, otherwise the number of errors of all kinds must have been seen. There are several mistakes which as they stand would seem to affect the author's claim to the possession of an University degree. Many are clearly printer's errors, but even these should be corrected.

MASTERS.

Two Hymns, from the Lyra Devoniensis. Set to music by Emily P. Sheppard.

WITH a little experience Miss Sheppard would write a very good hymn tune. Previously, however, it would be necessary for her to go through a course of Thorough Bass and Counterpoint, for although her ideas are admirable, she has not yet acquired the art of correctly expressing them on paper. Judging from the present specimens, however, the suggestion is worthy her consideration.

WEEKES AND CO.

The Wreathed Garland. Bolero for Pianoforte. By J. Parry Cole.

A PLEASING and well written Bolero, in D minor, but why called "The Wreathed Garland" we are at a loss to comprehend. The subject is characteristic, but national dances are fatally easy to write, and Boleros, Mazurkas, and Tarantellas are thrown off by hundreds of writers who would find it a hard task to compose a simple movement where symmetry, constructive power and development of subject must be united. Mr. Cole's Bolero may fairly claim a right to be heard; for it is at least as good as the majority of dance pieces written for the drawing-room.

Why, Colin, dost thou linger. Song. By Arthur Skey.

THE construction of this song shows an immaturity which is scarcely redeemed by either the theme or its accompaniments, both of which give proof of musical feeling. It commences with an eight-bar melody, which, after a short symphony, comes all over again. Then we have a sort of second part, in the Dominant, and this is followed by the first subject, slightly altered, which ends the composition, one monotonous accompaniment being continued throughout. The words, which relate to the passion of Colin for Phyllis (two personages whom we had hoped were by this time superannuated), are by no means ill suited for music, but Mr. Skey has not caught the spirit of the olden composers, who first made these love-sick beings famous.

Bemrose and Sons.

A Manual of the Theory of Music. By George Sutherland, Head-Master of St. Andrew's Middle-Class School, Derby.

If music should ever be included amongst the subjects taught in elementary schools, it is absolutely necessary that the text-books used for the purpose should be submitted to a recognised board of professors before they become duly authorised. In his Preface to the Manual, Mr. Sutherland says that it "was originally intended for the author's use in his own school, but at the request of several teachers, he has been induced to bring it before the public." As we can scarcely imagine that the Head-master of a school is, as a rule, the most efficient person to give laws to his pupils on so difficult a science as music, we can only suppose that this is an exceptional case; and if we deal with Mr. Sutherland's Treatise, therefore, not as the work of a thoroughly competent schoolmaster, but as that of a thoroughly competent musician, it is because by publishing a book intended, as he states, for "Members of Parish Choirs, competitors at the Oxford and Cambridge Local Middle-Class Examinations, and pupils of Middle-Class and Elementary Schools," the author challenges not criticism as an amateur, but as a teacher whose precepts are certain to receive universal acknowledgment. In the first place there is in this work no time-table at all from which a tyro can learn. It is very true that a musician should know that "If the semi-breve 𝅝=4, then the minim 𝅗𝅥=2," but what a student wants to understand is the real value of every note, under all circumstances, and this can only be explained by the old plan of saying that a semibreve is equal to two minims, four crotchets, eight quavers &c., for this is as unfailingly true as that a sovereign is equal to two half-sovereigns, four crowns, &c.: no unnecessary ifs should be given in teaching the first principles. Then to ascertain whether a composition is in a major or minor key, the following directions are given:—"Look what key the signature gives, and if the fifth of that key be sharpened, the piece will be in the minor mode, the minor key being a semitone higher than the sharpened fifth." So that every piece is first to be assumed to be in a major key (no matter how it may commence), and we are afterwards to make the discovery, by encountering a sharpened fifth, that up to this point we have been singing with a totally wrong notion. That this is Mr. Sutherland's fixed idea may be proved by his afterwards saying that "The Tonic Minor signature of any scale may be found at the interval of a minor third above the key-note of that scale," a sentence which would be perfectly unintelligible were we not convinced that with our author the major key rules the whole of music, the minor being admitted as an occasional and allowable licence. In the explanation of Intervals we are told that the illustrations are "taken from the key of C," but considering that not only some which are in the key are avoided (as, for instance, the diminished 5th), but that such examples as a diminished 3rd, C♯ to E♭ are given, we think that a pupil must be somewhat puzzled to understand the construction of a Diatonic scale. Passing over the unfortunate assertion that C to D♯ is a Diatonic Semitone (an error for which we suppose the printer must be held responsible) we are informed that Chromatic Intervals are so called because they "were distinguished by the ancients by red-coloured notes." As the author never explains what Chromatic Intervals are, this account of the origin of their names cannot prove of much service; and of course, for the same reason, the statement that "Diatonic Intervals are augmented by increasing the Major or Perfect Intervals by a Chromatic Semitone, and they are diminished by diminishing the Minor or Imperfect Interval by a Chromatic Semitone, can convey no possible meaning to a student who has never been taught how to classify the various intervals in his mind at first. We give Mr. Sutherland every credit for his assertion that Rhythm must not be confounded with Time, and indeed we think that the Chapter on the various kinds of Rhythm about the clearest in the book. But his explanation of "Harmony," that subject which has occupied the ripest thought of so many able musicians, is a model of conciseness. After giving the common chord of C and its inversions (marked O) and the Dominant seventh and its inversions (marked P), he says "The Bars marked O represent the Common chord and its Inversions; those marked P represent the Chord of the Dominant seventh and its Inversions. Other chords there are foreign to those in O and P, but they are known as 'Passing Chords'." This information will be a real boon to students who fancied that the comprehension of the theory of chords was a somewhat difficult matter; and will render the many elaborate treatises on Harmony totally useless. In the translation of the Italian words used at the commencement of a piece of music Mr. Sutherland has fallen into the usual error of saying that Andantino is "slower than Andante"; and curiously enough, although both etto and ino, in Italian diminish the force of a word, he only admits this in the case of the former, for he says Larghetto is "not so slow as Largo," and that Allegretto is "not so fast as Allegro." He does not even mention the Acciacatura, and mixes up Appoggiaturas and Grace notes together, not seeming to be aware that although all Appoggiaturas are Grace notes, all Grace notes are not Appoggiaturas. We have little doubt that our author will consider us unduly severe upon his little book, but he must recollect that we are not expressing opinions but pointing out errors. "Facts are stubborn things," and as we do not dispute Mr. Sutherland's power to correct the mistakes of daily occurrence in teaching subjects which he has made the study of his life, he must excuse us if we claim the same privilege for ourselves.

Parochial Church Music. Remarks reprinted from the "Huyton Parish Magazine."

A tract which, professing to deal with the humble subject of church music, begins with the sentence "There are probably very few persons who are insensible to the influence of music on the human mind" would apparently promise some heavy reading, and scare timorous readers at once. The more enterprising student might however find that it is not well to trust to first appearances, for there is much in this little book that will repay a careful perusal. Not that any new theories are advanced, or that the old ones are placed in a new light, but simply the ancient truisms are once more ventilated, and attention attracted to those facts which somehow the clergy and laity alike so frequently lose sight of.

For example we are told that the music of the church "should be the best that can be had,"—"should also be solemn," and "free from all secular associations." This is incontrovertible, and yet how few churches in England are free from the sin of using hymn tunes of the most coarse, vulgar, and debasing kind, which are defended on the utterly inadequate plea that the people sing them. Do not the people sing the good tunes also—"Abide with me," "Jerusalem the golden," "O come and mourn with me," and a multitude of others?

A defence of the practice of intoning the service then follows, supported by quotations from papers read on various occasions by the musical professors of Oxford and Dublin, and the Rev. J. B. Dykes, the strongest argument being that where the alternative of "said" or "sung" is offered, it is natural to choose the one which excludes any possible evil arising from peculiarity of delivery, and ensures audibility to the greatest extent. We cannot, however, agree with the advice that D ♯ or E should be selected as the reciting note, experience having proved that G is the most advantageous one to use, being neither too high for a bass voice, nor too low for a tenor.

Our author then proceeds very properly to condemn double chants, showing how the antithetical parallelism of the Psalms is utterly ruined by their use. The "Services" or ornate settings of the Canticles are next passed in review somewhat laboriously and unsatisfactorily, a penitential setting of the Kyrie being recommended, and a monotone Credo, or "Marbeck's arrangement; the latter being, in addition to its appropriateness, entitled to the regard of churchmen for its antiquity." (!) This is one of the strangest arguments that could possibly be conceived; for, apart from other considerations, there are several other "arrangements" of the Credo with about equal claims to high antiquity, and certainly of superior merit. Therefore why Marbeck, except that it has been popular amongst certain parties usually more remarkable for Catholicity than correctness of musical taste. Anthems and Hymns are then sensibly discussed; after which a chapter is devoted to the important subject of the Offices for the solemnization of Matrimony and the Burial of the Dead. In regard to the latter, a setting of a simple and beautiful kind by Mr. John Goss was issued some time ago, with which our author does not seem to be acquainted, and as he deplores the scarcity of settings, it would appear advisable to draw his attention to it.

Although the pamphlet would be greatly improved by compression, it is as it stands worthy the attention of all who are interested in church music.

Original Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—With reference to "An Observer's" letter appearing in the Musical Times for the present month, and your editorial note at foot, I venture to ask if anyone can be surprised at the low salaries paid to organists when such persons as "A. Z.," "W. R." and "A. H. G." advertise for situations (page 198 of the present month's paper) and that they will undertake the duties "gratuitously, salary being no object."

I am especially disgusted that "W. R." holding, as he says, a "first-class appointment in the City," should stoop so low as to offer his and an assistant's services gratuitously, "stipend no object," and by so doing not only degrade himself but the profession of which, by his advertisement, he would appear to be a member. Apologising for troubling you,

I remain, Sir,
Yours truly,
Another Observer.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

The correspondent who sends us the slip from the "Sheffield Daily Telegraph" is informed that, although "yesterday" may be a sufficient date to those who have the newspaper in their hand, it is not of much service when a notice is cut out and enclosed to us in a letter. We trust that this will be a hint to many others who constantly furnish us with similarly vague communications.

A. B.—We can take no notice of a letter which has been sent to, and inserted, in another journal.

C. Kroll Laporte.—The interesting account of Beethoven's last moments, furnished us by our correspondent, has already appeared in English musical publications.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Cobham, Surrey.—The Thanksgiving Services for the late harvest were held in St. Andrew's Church on Thursday, the 21st ult., being St. Matthew's Day. The services commenced with a choral celebration of Holy Communion at 8 a.m. Order of services:—Processional Hymn 385 A. and M., "Onward, Christian Soldiers." The Choir and Priests, with their banners, walked in procession round to the west entrance. Dr. Hayne's Communion Service was sung, and a selection from the works of Gounod was played on the organ during celebration. At 11 o'clock nearly a thousand of the parishioners joined the procession from the parochial schools to the Church, headed by a military band, to Choral Matins at 11.30 a.m. Processional Hymn 360, "We plough the fields." The "Ferial Responses," by Barnby, were sung. Te Deum, Young in G; Jubilate, fifth tone, first ending. Hymns 370 and 223, "Come, ye thankful people." The singing was greatly praised; indeed the choir is acknowledged to be the best in the deanery. Mr. Brooke, the organist and choir-master, played with much effect Beethoven's and Handel's Hallelujah Choruses at the conclusion of the service. The sermon was preached by the Rev. G. Baneks (vicar). The Church was chastely decorated with wheat, fruit, and flowers. Dinner, tea, and a variety of sports were provided for the parishioners and friends; and at the conclusion, three cheers were given for the vicar and Mrs. Bancks, who richly deserve the warmest thanks for so successfully carrying out the festival.

Dudley.—A crowded congregation assembled at the Harvest Festival, in the Parish Church, on Tuesday, the 19th ult. The Church was magnificently decorated for the occasion. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Sir Lovelace Stamer, Bart., Rector of Stoke-upon-Trent. The service was ably intoned by the Rev. William Reyner Cosens, M.A., Vicar of Dudley. The service, which was a full choral one, was rendered by about 90 voices. The Psalms were sung to Battishill and Ouseley; Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur to Monk and Turle. The Anthem was by Goss—"The Glory of the Lord," which was admirably sung The Anthem was conducted by the Choir-master, Mr. G. H. Mainwaring; and Mr. H. J. Blunden presided at the organ with much ability. The collection amounted to the sum of £22.

Glasgow.—A performance of sacred music was given by the Glasgow Choral Union, in the Cathedral, on Saturday afternoon, the 16th ult., before a large and appreciative audience. The most important pieces performed were Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Why rage fiercely;" Purcell's Anthem, "O Sing unto the Lord;" Gounod's "Ave Verum" (in E flat); Goss's Harvest Anthem, "I will magnify Thee. O God;" Mendelssohn's Chorus for male voices, "Beati Mortui;" and the "Benedictus" from Schubert's Mass in F. The singing is described by a local paper to have been unequal; but the utmost praise is awarded for the very fine rendering of Purcell's Anthem, Gounod's "Ave Verum," and Goss's "I will magnify Thee." Mr. Lambeth conducted with his well-known efficiency, and Mr. Peace presided at the harmonium.

Llandaff.—The annual gathering of the Parochial Choirs of the Diocese of Llandaff took place on Wednesday, the 6th ult., when Llandaff Cathedral was as usual the centre of attraction to thousands of visitors. In consequence of the large number of Welsh-speaking worshippers in the Church, the choral festival is once in three years held entirely in Welsh, as from the existence of the two languages in the diocese, it is impossible to collect on any one occasion all the parish choirs. More than one-half of them do not understand Welsh sufficiently to join in a Welsh service; while others again have as almost an imperfect acquaintance with the English language. As the choirs marched into the Cathedral they were divided at the eastern end of the nave. By 11 o'clock nearly all were seated, when the conductor, Eos Llechyd, appeared, and Mr. Aylward presiding at the organ, a short rehearsal took place. In about half an hour the doors were thrown open and the public admitted. So popular had the festival become, that the spacious nave was insufficient to accommodate the throng outside who pressed forward to be admitted, and nave, clerestory, and presbytery were filled, hundreds standing upon the steps and the slope leading to the west entrance. The morning service commenced as usual with a procession of the surpliced clergy from the prebendal house. On reaching the western door the clergy commenced singing the Processional Hymn, the choirs joining with the chorus. The Rev. W. Howell intoned the service; the first lesson being read by the Rev. Canon Jenkins, of Llangyniew, and the second by the Rev. Canon Morgan, of St. Mary's, Cardiff. The choral part of the service was rendered with more spirit and precision than have ever been known at these gatherings. With the exception of the first chant, which was Gregorian, the whole of the music was Anglican, and was well adapted for choral purposes. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Evans, vicar of Rhymney, from the text, "O come, let us sing unto the Lord."

At the conclusion of the sermon an old Welsh hymn tune was sung, during which the collection was made, which amounted to £13. 10s. After the service, the Bishop and the Dean entertained the clergy and their friends at Bishop's Court and the Deanery. Much credit is due to the Rev. E. Jones, of Bedwelty, who almost unaided has carried through the entire arrangements for the festival.

Llanelly.—On the 28th August a musical festival, on behalf of the Village Hospital, was held, which proved a complete success. The Pavilion erected especially for the occasion in the Market-place, and calculated to accommodate 4000 persons, was well filled. The programme was divided into two parts, the first being a musical competition, and the second an evening concert. Mr. Brinley Richards was the adjudicator of the prizes; and before entering upon his duties, he spoke most warmly and eloquently upon the good that must accrue from meetings like this, not only in a musical but a social point of view. Prizes were awarded for the rendering of Barnby's "O Paradise" (by a juvenile choir); of an anthem, by Joseph Parry (competed for by three choirs); of Mendelssohn's "Rise up, arise" (also competed for by three choirs); and many others which we have not space to enumerate. The evening concert was inconveniently crowded, and the several artists who appeared found it difficult to obtain a satisfactory hearing, in consequence of the confusion which arose amongst the audience. The vocalists were Miss Annie Edmonds, Miss Watts, Miss Llewellyn Bagnall (of the Royal Academy of Music), Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Carter, and Mr. Winn. Mr. Brinley Richards was also engaged to give a pianoforte solo. Mr. C. Videon Harding ably sustained the duties of accompanist.

Margate.—At the Hall-by-the-Sea several artists of ability have appeared during the past month, amongst whom we may mention Miss Blanche Reives, Miss Katherine Sinclair, Mr. Edward Cotte, and Mr. Orlando Christian. Miss Reives, in "The Skipper and his Boy," Miss Sinclair, in "Lillie's Good Night," Mr. Edward Cotte, in "The Bay of Biscay," and Mr. Christian, in "O, ruddier than the Cherry," and the ballad "Farewell," elicited warm applause. Some well arranged operatic selections by the band were highly successful. The Hall has been crowded every evening.

New Zealand.—The Christchurch Musical Society gave another of its Quarterly Concerts on the 9th June, consisting of Mendelssohn's Oratorio, St. Paul. The band and chorus mustered over 100 performers, under the conductorship of Mr. Robert Parker, late assistant organist of King's College, London. Herr Bünz very efficiently led the orchestra. The soloists were Miss Ada Taylor (Soprano), Mrs. Robinson (Contralto), Messrs. A. Appleby and H. Thompson (Tenor), and Dr. Haast and Mr. J. Lea (Bass). The performance was in every respect highly satisfactory.

Penrith.—The Second Festival of the Association for the Improvement of Church Choirs in the district round Penrith took place in the Parish Church on Thursday, the 31st August. The choirs numbered upwards of 200, fifty of whom were surpliced; and there was a marked improvement in the manner in which the music was rendered. The service commenced with the Processional Hymn, "Saviour, Blessed Saviour." The Psalms were sung to single chants, viz., Hackett in B flat and Macfarren in B flat. Magnificat, Dupuis in G; Nunc Dimittis, "Chatres," in E flat. The hymn after the third collect was "Hark the sound of holy voices," and was sung to a very fine tune by Dr. Dykes, in A flat. The other two hymns were "Hymns Ancient and Modern" 304 and 368. The service was concluded by the hymn "O Paradise;" and as the choirs and congregation dispersed, the organist played Mendelssohn's War March of the Priests from Athalie. The service was intoned by the Revs. S. J. Butler and G. Lightfoot. The Lessons were read by the Revs. G. F. Weston and C. H. Gem; the Rev. Canon Prescott being the preacher. The organist of the Church, Mr. R. B. Bateman, presided at the organ.

Penzance.—A concert was given in St. John's Hall, on the 19th ult., by the members of the Penzance Choral Society, under the able direction of Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A. The programme opened with Romberg's Lay of the Bell, of which a very satisfactory performance was given. The part of the Master was energetically sung by Mr. S. White, and the remaining solo parts by Miss Vingoe, Miss Cock, Messrs. Sampson, H. White and Berriman. The second part of the concert commenced with a fine rendering of Sir W. S. Bennett's Caprice in E, Op., 22, for pianoforte, with orchestra, by Miss Symons, of Camborne, and also comprised the Scena, "Softly sighs," from Der Freischütz (the singing of which, by Miss Vingoe, created a marked effect with the audience), and Locke's music to Macbeth. Messrs. W. C. Hemmings and R. White, Jun., occupied, with their usual ability, the posts of principal violin and organ respectively.

Ramsgate.—The Harvest Festival on Sunday, the 10th ult., at St. Mary's Church, was of the most hearty and joyous character. The church was beautifully decorated with corn, hops, fruit and flowers, the decorations of the altar being especially chaste, surpassing in effect any on previous festivals. The congregations both in the morning and evening were so large that all could not be accommodated with seats. At the early celebration there were forty communicants, and at the late celebration, which was choral, about a hundred. The offertories throughout the day amounted to nearly £24. The musical portion of the service, under the able and careful direction of Mr. Thorne, the organist, was well rendered, the Anthem from Haydn's Creation, "The Heavens are telling," being sung with great precision and spirit, and the Hallelujah Chorus in the evening being given with marked effect at the close of the service. The text of the morning sermon, preached by the Incumbent, was from Psalm cxliv., 13, 14, and that of the evening, preached by the Rev. H. J. Wardell, curate, was from the Gospel of the day.

Skelmorlie.—On Friday, the 25th August, an evening concert was given by the members of the Skelmorlie Parish Church Choir, under the management of their organist and choirmaster, Mr. J. E. R. Senior, assisted by Miss Fawcett, of the Yorkshire concerts. The choir rendered the following pieces:—"The Welcome Home," three of Mendelssohn's Part-Songs. "The Cuckoo," "Spring with fairy foot returning" (William Tell), "All among the barley," "Slow in the eastern sky," and the Gipsy Chorus (Preciosa). Miss Fawcett was highly successful, and received a well-merited encore, in the song, "By the margin of fair Zurich's waters." In the duets, "I've wander'd in dreams," and "Home to our mountains," she was joined by Mr. Senior, who also played a pianoforte solo, and accompanied the vocal music.——An organ Recital was given by Mr. Senior in the church on Wednesday, the 30th August. The programme included the Overture, Occasional Oratorio (Handel); "Marche Solennelle" (Schubert); "Toccata and Fugue" (Bach); Mendelssohn's 5th Sonata; "Harmonious Blacksmith," arranged by Dr. Chipp; War March of the Priests (Athalie); and the "Hallelujah" from Beethoven's Engedi Several solos and anthems were sung by the choir and Miss Fawcett, including "O Lord my God" (S. S. Wesley), "From mighty kings," "Let the bright Seraphim," "Who shall be fleetest" (Barnby), and "I mourn as a dove" (Benedict).

Southsea.—An amateur concert was given at the Portland Hall on Wednesday evening, the 6th ult., in aid of the fund for the Organ of St. Jude's Church, which has been recently enlarged by Messrs. Gray and Davison. Mrs. Percy Smith and Mrs. Frank Conway Gordon sang exceedingly well, and Miss L. Jeaffreson (who possesses a good contralto voice) was highly successful in "Batti Batti." Mr. C. E. McCheane's song was effectively rendered and received a decided encore. as did also the duet, "Love and War." Mr. Benson sang with much taste and precision, receiving an encore for his song, "Medje;" and Mr. Hardy's "Yeoman's Wedding Song" was also re-demanded. The Pianoforte Solos, by Messrs. St. George and Rabbitt, were given with considerable executive talent. The band, under the direction of Herr Kreyer, performed in a manner which elicited warm applause, especially the glees at the end of the second part, which were given with such effect as to be encored.

Woburn, Beds.—The last festival of the season in connection with the Church Musical Society for the Archdeaconry of Bedford, was held on Thursday, the 7th ult., at Woburn Parish Church, and passed off in a highly satisfactory manner. The choirs, numbering about 500, were accompanied by their Clergy. The hymns (from "Hymns Ancient and Modern") were given with much precision and earnestness, the gradations of tone being well observed. The prayers, &c., were intoned by Rev. C. Brereton, of St. Mary's, Bedford. Notwithstanding the difficulty of the anthem (by J. Barnby), "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills," it was excellently sung. Mr. W. H. Byfield, organist of the Parish Church, Ampthill, presided with great ability at the organ. Whilst the congregation was leaving the Church, Mr. Byfield played a solo and chorus, by Rossini, and a piece by W. T. Best. After service the choirs and visitors were entertained at tea in Woburn Park, by his Grace the Duke of Bedford; Lady Elizabeth Russell kindly presiding.

Worthing.—On Thursday, the 31st August, a new organ, by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, was opened at St. George's Church. After Morning Prayer a sermon was preached by the very Rev. Dr. Hook, Dean of Chichester. Miss Palmer played the services, and Mr. H. S. Cook, organist of the Chapel of Ease, performed the voluntaries and several pieces at the conclusion of the services. In the evening Mr. C. E. Willing, of the Foundling, London (who kindly volunteered his services), gave an organ Recital, displaying the qualities of the instrument to great advantage.

Organ Appointments.—Mr. T. Stodart Beswick, Organist and Choir-master to Holy Trinity Church, Bingley, Leeds.——Mr. George F. Le Jeune, from St. George's Church, Montreal, to Pearl street Congregational Church, Hartford, Conn.——Mr. R. J. Fowler, from Knox Church, to St. George's Church, Montreal.——Mr. William Nivin, from Zion Church, to St. Paul's Church, Montreal.——Mr. W. Reeves, to St. Thomas's Church, Hackney Road.——Mr. George Legge—formerly organist of St. Mary, Haggerston—Organist and Choir-master to St. Thomas (late Archbishop Tenison's Chapel), Regent Street.——Mr. Rawdon Robinson, to Providence Place, Cleckheaton.——Mr. John Smyth, Organist and Choir-master to St. Philip's Church, Sydenham.——Mr. H. Houseley, late of St. Matthews, Nottingham, Organist and Choir-master to St. Luke's, Derby.——Mr. W. Staton, Organist and Choir-master to St. Peter's Collegiate Church, Wolverhampton.——Mr. J. E. Richardson, Organist and Choir-master to St. Agatha's Church, Finsbury.——Mr. Martin Schneider, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's Church, Bootle, Liverpool.——Mr. F. Thackwray. jun., to James Chapel, Woolton.

In the notice, in our last number, of the appointment of an organist at Bexley Heath, the name should have been Mr. Edmund Whomes, instead of Mr. Edmund Thomas. We must again request that correspondents will be more careful in their signatures.

F. HOWELL'S' new Ballad, "Thy Child's an Angel now." Poetry by S. P. H. Dedicated to Madame Laura Baxter. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street.

"The pathetic character of the verses here set to music can be inferred from the title; and it will suffice to say that Mr. Howell has adapted to them a very sweet and appropriate melody, simply accompanied, and not only allowing, but inviting, all the expression of which a singer is capable. Such a ballad can easily be made heart-touching."—Musical World.

STUDIES for the PEDAL, with many Illustrations from the Works of Bach, and other Organ Composers; Foshe ng how passages of special difficulty are to be played.

Part II. of THE ART OF ORGAN PLAYING, by W. T. Best.

The first part of "The Art of Organ Playing" dealt mercly wht those peculiarities of touch and fingering in which the my performance on the keyboard of an Organ differs from tha Pianoforte; but the characteristic of Organ music is, th demands the simultaneous use of both Hands and Feet; a matte invoiving a different employment of the Left Hand, which does no play the Bass, as in Pianoforte music, except where the Pedal part ceases for the moment. A proper manner of playing all those passages assigned to the Pedal is as important a study, in its way, as a correct method of fingering, as applied to a keyed instrument. The present exercises have specially in view that opposed motion of the Left hand to the Pedal part, which constitutes one of the principal difficulties to be overcome by an Organ-player; as the practice of mere passages for the Pedals, unaccompanied by the use of the Hands will never enable a student to obtain the requisite facility. The manner of combining the various stops, and employing the different keyboards of an Organ is also taught throughout the work, each Study having directions for the use of those registers which are calculated to give it the best effect.

"For variety of style, utility, and, it may safely be added, general excellence, this work is unique. No collection of original organ music of this or any other country is comparable with it in these respects. Its contributors are living writers, native and foreign, many of them well known to fame. Its contents are original in the double sense of being designed for the instrument and not previously published. Its editor selects his material with undoubted taste, and its publishers lay it out in a style most comporting to the eye for clearness and elegance, and all this at a very moderate cost. It is truly an important work to all classes of organists, calculated to exercise a powerful, and, in the main, beneficial influence on the art of organ-playing."—Dundee Advertiser, July 31, 1871.

Novello's Octavo Edition of Anthems.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. beg to announce that they are now publishing, in the octavo form, a series of Anthems by Modern Composers, principally selected from their extensive Catalogue, and also including new works of undoubted merit. The preference shown by the musical public for the small Scores over the separate vocal parts, has been so marked as to warrant the publishers in anticipating a more than usually large circulation for the Edition.

The series includes works by the following and other Composers:—

J. BARNBY.
SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.
SIR W. STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. Prof.
W. T. BEST.
OSKAR BOLCK.
J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.
E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Doc.
SIR G. J. ELVEY, Mus. Doc.
G. M. GARRETT, Mus. Doc.
JOHN GOSS.
CH. GOUNOD.
HENRY HILES, Mus. Doc.
FERDINAND HILLER, Mus. Doc.
E. J. HOPKINS.
J. L. HOPKINS, Mus. Doc.
HENRY LESLIE.
G. A. MACFARREN.
E. G. MONK, Mus. Doc.
THE REV. SIR FRED. A. G. OUSELEY.
WILLIAM REA.
HENRY SMART.
JOHN STAINER, Mus. Doc.
CHARLES STEGGALL, Mus. Doc.
R. P. STEWART, Mus. Doc.
ARTHUR S. SULLIVAN.
E. H. THORNE.
BERTHOLD TOURS.
JAMES TURLE.
S. S. WESLEY, Mus. Doc.

The Anthems are issued in Weekly Numbers, at Twopence, Threepence, Fourpence, or Sixpence each, according to their length.

A Volume, consisting of twenty-six numbers, will be published half-yearly.

Many of the best known and most favourite Anthems of the above composers, which have hitherto been only obtainable in the large and comparatively expensive Folio size will thus be brought within the reach of all.

It is also intended to include in this series, Anthems by Ancient Composers, but these will always be issued in twenty-six consecutive numbers, so as to form a separate Volume.

The following Anthems are now ready :—

WALTER MAYNARD'S

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercise given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.

Part III. contains INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.

Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

CHAPPELL AND CO., 50, New Bond-street; and of all Music and Booksellers in Town and Country.

A NEW WORK FOR THE ORGAN.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by Dr. Rimbault. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 6 are now ready:—

No. 1. Zadok the Priest.
2. From the Censer.
3. We never will bow down.
4. He gave them hailstones.
5. Sing unto God.
6. Hallelujah.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of Handel's Celebrated Choruses arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of Handel's Choruses for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

RECOMMENDED BY ALL THE PROFESSORS.

THE DIGITORIUM (a Small Dumb Piano).

This remarkable Invention materially assists any person to play and become perfect on the Pianoforte, Organ, or Harmonium, in an incredibly short time; and can now be had (price 15s., or with ivory keys, 18s.) of the sole Makers,

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

THE Oratorio Concerts.

Conductor - - Mr. BARNBY.

FOURTH SEASON, 1871-2.

THE Directors of the "Oratorio Concerts" beg to announce that a Series of Ten Subscription Concerts will be given during the ensuing Season at EXETER HALL, when the following works will be performed.

BACH'S PASSION,
HANDEL'S JEPHTHA, JUDAS MACCABÆUS,
MESSIAH, AND ISRAEL IN EGYPT,
ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER, and HAYDN'S CREATION,
MENDELSSOHN'S ST. PAUL, HYMN OF PRAISE,
AND ELIJAH.

The Directors have much pleasure in stating that

MR. SIMS REEVES

has accepted engagements for the whole of these performances, and the Subscribers will therefore be enabled to hear this great artist in all those parts which, by his unequalled rendering, he has made peculiarly his own. The following eminent vocalists will also appear:—

Mme. LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON, Miss JULIA ELTON.
Mdme. CORA DE WILHORST, Herr STOCKHAUSEN,
Miss EDITH WYNNE. Mr. LEWIS THOMAS,
Mdme. RUDERSDORFF, Mr. WINN,
Mdme. PATEY, Signor FOLI,
Mr. SANTLEY.

The Members of the Orchestra will be selected, as heretofore, from the best instrumentalists in London; and the Chorus, which will be considerably augmented, will consist of Mr. Barnby's Choir, numbering altogether about

500 PERFORMERS.

One of the principal objects gained in the removal of the Concerts to Exeter Hall will be the securing of sufficient space in the Orchestra to admit of a perfect balance between the Band and Chorus. The Directors have also to announce that, in order to ensure the comfort of the audience, the whole of the seats have been, at a considerable cost, re-cushioned.

The following are the dates of the Concerts:

1871. WEDNESDAYS, NOVEMBER 15, DECEMBER 6, DECEMBER 20.
1872. TUESDAYS, JANUARY 23, FEBRUARY 6, FEBRUARY 20, MARCH 5, MARCH 19,
WEDNESDAYS, APRIL 10, APRIL 24.

Subscription:—Stalls (Reserved and Numbered) £3 3s.; Area and West Gallery (Reserved and Numbered) £2 2s.
Prices of Admission to each Concert:—Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Area and West Gallery (Reserved and Numbered), 5s.; Gallery, 3s.; Area, 2s.; Admission, 1s.
Subscribers Names received by Messrs. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.; the principal Music-sellers; and at St. James's Hall, by Mr. AUSTIN.

THE HYMNARY,

A BOOK OF CHURCH SONG.

Edited by the
REV. WILLIAM COOKE, Hon. Canon of Chester, and the
REV. BENJAMIN WEBB, Vicar of S. Andrews, Wells Street.

THE work contains 630 Hymns, of which a large number are entirely new, many being translations from the Latin, Greek, and German done specially for this work.

Several Editions of "The Hymnary" in various sizes, to correspond with the Prayer Book, are in preparation, and will be issued at the lowest possible prices. London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

THE HYMNARY,

A BOOK OF CHURCH SONG.

With Accompanying Tunes.

EDITED BY
MR. JOSEPH BARNBY.

This Edition will contain a few of the most favourite of the 17th century Tunes, and almost all the best productions of the present century, supplemented by a large number of Tunes written expressly for this work by the following Composers:—

M. CHARLES GOUNOD.
Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.
Mr. JOHN GOSS
Mr. JAMES TURLE.
Mr. G. A. MACFARREN.
Mr. E. J. HOPKINS.
Dr. E. G. MONK.
Dr. JOHN STAINER.
Dr. PHILIP ARMES.
Mr. J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.
The Rev. Sir F. OUSELEY, Bart.
SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.
Mr. HENRY SMART.
Dr. STEGGALL.
Mr. E. H. THORNE.
Dr. GARRETT.
Dr. GAUNTLETT.
Mr. BERTHOLD TOURS.
Mr. JOSEPH BARNBY and
DR. WESLEY.

An Edition consisting of the Tunes alone (without the Hymns) will be published, so as to form a Supplemental Tune Book, which may be used with any other Hymnal, and which will form in itself the most perfect collection of contemporary contributions to the Hymn Music of our day.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co.

LONDON:

C. JEFFERYS, 57, BERNERS STREET.

Catalogues of Felix Gantier's Popular Compositions and Arrangements may be had on application.

TO THE MUSICAL PUBLIC IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO, beg to inform the public of the United States of America that they have just opened a Music Store at

751, BROADWAY,

where a large stock of every musical publication in their extensive and varied catalogue will be constantly kept. The rapid growth of musical taste in America, and the increasing desire for procuring the standard works at a moderate price, induce Messrs. Novello to believe that, although the music published by them in London could always be procured through a recognised agent in New York, the time has arrived when it is absolutely necessary to have an Establishment of their own in the City, conducted by those experienced in the London business, so that the supply of the whole of their works may always keep pace with the demand. Catalogues, with the prices rendered into American currency, will be shortly published, and may be had gratis on application.

GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.—There is a VACANCY in this Choir for a BASS Voice as Lay Clerk or Singing Man. The duties are, to attend divine service twice daily, and practising, whenever required by the Precentor. The emoluments are, a fixed stipend of £40 a year and 1s. 6d. for every attendance at church. The Candidates likely to suit will be required to appear before the Dean and Chapter on some day in November next, which will be signified to them. Applications for the situation, stating the age and place of residence of the applicant, with testimonials as to moral and religious character, powers of voice, and musical capacity, are to be forwarded to the Precentor, 20, College-green, Gloucester, on or before the 21st day of November next.

By order of the Dean and Chapter,
17th October, 1871. George Whitcombe, Chapter Clerk.

HEREFORD CATHEDRAL.—ASSISTANT VICARS CHORAL.—Two or three VACANCIES (Bass or Tenor) will shortly be filled up. Preference given, cæterus paribus, to graduates in Holy Orders, or likely to become so. Particulars of duties and emoluments may be obtained on application to Messrs. Underwood and Knight, Chapter Clerks, Hereford.

AN ALTO, of Cathedral experience, will be open to an ENGAGEMENT after Christmas. First-class testimonials. Address "Alto," Novello and Co., 1, Berners-street.

ALTO.—A Young Man, possessing a good natural ALTO VOICE, who can read at sight, and accustomed to Full Choral Service, desires to sing at a church where EMPLOYMENT is given. Good references as to character and ability. Address D. W., care of Messrs. Novello and Co.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for the Parish Church of Daventry, Northants. Salary £30. A good opening for an efficient Teacher of Music, or the Mastership of a middle-class school might be held by a schoolmaster of ability in conjunction with the appointment. Address The Rector, Daventry.

AN Educated Gentleman seeks an ENGAGEMENT in a MUSIC WAREHOUSE, or ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER. Nine years' experience on Organ, Piano, and Teaching. A thorough musician; can tune; good penman. Would fulfil position of bookkeeper or clerk if required. Excellent testimonials. Address Alpha, Birkby, near Huddersfield.

TWO TENORS; for Sunday morning service only, at the Church of St. Dunstan-in-the-East, Eastcheap, near the Tower. Salary £8 a year. Must be able to read. Apply at the Church on Tuesday evening, 7th November, between 7 and 9 o'clock p.m.

TWO BASSES; for Sunday morning service only, also at St. Dunstan-in-the-East. Salary £7 a year. Must be able to read. Apply at the Church on Friday, 10th November, between 7 and 9 o'clock p.m.

WANTED, Three BASSES, in a Surpliced Choir, must be able to read music at sight. Two Sunday services, and one weekly rehearsal. Salary £10 per annum. Apply to F. Everard W. Hulton, Mus. Bac., 62, Sydney-street, Chelsea, or at the Vestry of St. Luke's, Chelsea, after Sunday evening service.

WANTED, a CHOIRMASTER, at a London Church; surpliced choir; Anglican service; 2 Sunday services; one full weekly evening service and practice. Tact and energy needed. Communicant desired; stipend; Tenor or Alto. Address, with references, B. L., Novello and Co., 1, Berners-street.

CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST.—Wanted, for the Parish of St. Mary Church, Torquay, an ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, who is capable of conducting a Gregorian or Anglican Choral Service; and of instructing the Choir properly to perform the same. He must be a Churchman and a communicant. Apply to W. H. Monk, Esq., King's College, London.

MR. J. C. BEUTHIN, Professor of Singing. Pupils prepared and introduced to the Stage or Concert Room. Classes for Harmony and Counterpoint are held at his residence, 37, Bernard-street, Russell-square, on Thursdays at 6; also for Choral Singing on Thursdays at 8. Terms, &c., at Messrs. Novello's, 1, Berners-street.

AS ORGANIST or ASSISTANT.—A good player will be glad to receive applications at once; terms nominal. Address X. P., care of Housekeeper, 18, Leadenhall-street.

ORGANIST.—An ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER is REQUIRED for St. Michael's Church, Chester-square, London. Application, by letter only, to Rev. Rowley Hill, 90, Eaton-place, S.W.

ORGANIST'S SITUATION REQUIRED.—The Advertiser (who is a pupil of Mr. Chappel Bachelor, R.A.M., and late Organist of South-well Minster) is thoroughly acquainted with the duties of Organist and Choirmaster, and has had for a number of years the organistship and control and training of an efficient Choir in Full Choral Service. Testimonials and references can be given. Address C. A. B., Musical Times office.

TO CATHEDRAL ORGANISTS and Others.—Wanted to PURCHASE cheap or to HIRE for a few months, some old Cathedral Anthems and Services, in score; also to Purchase Best's and Cooper's Organ Arrangements, in volumes, second hand. Address Organist, 27, High-street, Tewkesbury.

A PIANOFORTE and HARMONIUM TUNER and REPAIRER requires a SITUATION. Apply to C. P. T., C. Taphouse and Son, 3, Magdalen-street, Oxford.

WANTED, by a first-class PIANO TUNER and REPAIRER from Broadwoods, of 20 years' experience, a SITUATION (England preferred). Thoroughly understands Harmoniums and Organ work, Concertinas, &c.; first-class references. Address Tuner, Ruby Lodge, Merrion, Dublin, Ireland.

WANTED, for the Country, a good PIANOFORTE TUNER; constant employment and liberal wages. Address M. M., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.

A PIANOFORTE and HARMONIUM TUNER desires a RE-ENGAGEMENT: good references from present employer. Address D. W., 13, High-street, Dumfries.

TO PIANOFORTE and MUSICSELLERS.—A Young Lady of good address, a brilliant pianist, is desirous of obtaining a SITUATION in a MUSIC WAREHOUSE; has a thorough knowledge of the Sheet Music Trade. Unexceptionable references. Address C. T., 9, Elton-street, Lower Broughton, Manchester.

PIANOFORTE WAREHOUSE or MUSIC SHOP. A young Lady desires a RE-ENGAGEMENT; understands the business, and is a good saleswoman; town or country. Address Music, care of Mr. Wallis, Stationer, 238, Brixton-road, S.W.

A YOUNG LADY desires an ENGAGEMENT in a MUSIC SHOP. She can both play and sing, and is tolerably well acquainted with the Titles of Sheet Music. Address E. W., Jarrow House, Portswood, Southampton.

A YOUNG LADY required in a MUSIC WAREHOUSE (country); must be able to read at sight, teach, and keep accounts. Address R. A. R., care of Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners-street.

WANTED, a LADY for the COUNTER, in a Music Warehouse in the North of London; one who thoroughly understands the business: must be a good Pianist. Apply by letter only to D. J. A., Mr. Clark's, 9, Amen-corner, Paternoster-row.

A LADY (pupil of Lindsay Sloper) desires an ENGAGEMENT as DAILY MUSICAL GOVERNESS in a School (or private lessons). S. S. Wilson's, Newsagent, 24, Delancey-street, Regent's-park.

MUSICAL GOVERNESS.—RE-ENGAGEMENT required. Experienced; high references; four hours daily practice and superior piano lessons. Eight guineas and laundress. "Tuition," Post-office, Boston, Lincolnshire.

PIANISTE.—Wanted, by a Young Lady, pupil of the London Academy of Music, an ENGAGEMENT to play for Dancing, or as Accompanist. Y., 16, Prince of Wales-road, Kentish-town.

A VIOLINIST is open to an ENGAGEMENT for three evenings a week, either for teaching or playing. Music arranged for Voices or Orchestra. Address P. F., 2, Henrietta-street, Brunswick-square, W.C.

TO AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL or VOCAL ASSOCIATIONS.—A Gentleman is willing to conduct an Orchestral or Vocal Association in London or the suburbs, without remuneration. Address D. S. W., 43, Paternoster-row.

THE OVERTURE TO MOZART'S "DON GIOVANNI."

By J. C. Lobe.

[To save space, the examples, in most cases, are only indicated by the number of the bar. By numbering the bars of the allegro in a pianoforte copy, they will be easily referred to.]

Goethe has laid it down as a rule, that a true artist does not make a single stroke without its definite aim and meaning. By none, it has been said, has this rule been so much disregarded as by musical composers, and among these perhaps by no one so much as by—Mozart!

Although it is allowed that he has always expressed the truth with the utmost accuracy as well as beauty, it has been urged against him, that though he has done so with a clear consciousness and in full view of the aim and meaning of every stroke, it has nevertheless been instinctively, and by a process for which he could give no reason.

An assertion, so depreciative of art in general, is the more incomprehensible when applied to Mozart. Frequent passages in his letters offer the surest evidence of the attention he bestowed upon all musical phenomena, how accurately he gauged the nature of his art, and with what clearness and consciousness of will he undertook the composition of his best works.

A few such instances quoted from Nissen's Biography may serve to acquit Mozart of the charge of working instinctively, as so many still think he did, and at the same time tend to exhibit him as the reflecting man and artist he really was.

During his stay in England his father's dangerous illness prevented his playing the piano. To amuse himself the child accordingly set to work to compose his first symphony for full orchestra. His sister was obliged to sit by him and copy down what he wrote. As he was thus engaged composing and writing he said to her once, "Mind you remind me to give the horns something suitable and important."

I mention this incident here, as being one of more significance than at first it seems; for it proves that a conscious will—the possession of which is generally denied him throughout his whole career—had already shown itself in his earliest childhood. Thus even in the early development of his fancy, it seems, he exercised his powers of reflection, as well as worked with a conscious will, which comes to much the same thing. If, therefore, a conscious will declared itself in the act of composition even during his early childhood, is it likely that no trace of it would remain in his youth and manhood? would only this feature of the training of his intellect have disappeared, while all the others attained such a wonderful refinement?

In a letter to his father, written in Munich, while he was engaged in the composition of "Idomeneo," he says: "Tell me, do you not think the speech of the subterraneous spirit (the Oracle of Neptune) is too long? Consider this fully. Imagine yourself in the theatre. The voice should impress one with terror. One should feel that it actually does so. Now how can this be brought about if the speech is too long? Will it not rather by its inordinate length convince the audience of its unreality? If the ghost's speech in 'Hamlet' were not so long, it would be even more effective than it is. This speech of the spirit might also quite easily be shortened, and would gain thereby more than it would lose."

From the first italicised passage it assuredly is not a whimsical youth writing down his thoughts at random that we see, but a bright clear intellect maturely deliberating the nature of his work in hand and the requirements of the scene and the incidents about to be depicted in music—in short, the possession of that reflective power which reveals the best opportunities and the best method of treating them, so that they may make a due effect upon their hearers. Before drawing upon his fancy for proper material for depicting this scene, Mozart precisely states what must be its effect. Fully sensible of its aim and importance, he will not admit a single stroke which does not contribute towards the end in view.

And how did it happen that he, whom many regard as a genius, who was right only by instinct, came to make so pertinent a remark regarding the ghost in "Hamlet,"—a remark which testifies to the possession of sharp faculties of observation?

In a letter to his father in Salzburg, he writes thus respecting the "Entführung:"

"Osmin's rage is made comical by the accompaniment of the Turkish music. In working out his aria, I have given full scope to Fischer's fine deep tones to vibrate. 'D'rum beim Barte des Propheten,' etc., is indeed in the same time, but with quicker notes; and as his wrath gradually increases, (when the aria appears to be at an end) the allegro assai, following in quite another measure and key, must insure the best effect; for as a man in such a violent fit of passion transgresses all the bounds of order and propriety, and forgets himself in his fury, so must also the music. But as the passions, whether violent or not, must never be expressed so as to become revolting, and the music, even in the most appalling situations, never offend the ear, but continue to please and be melodious. I did not go from F, in which the air is written, into a remote key, but into an analogous one, not however into its nearest relative, D minor, but into the more remote A minor."

In the first passage we recognise the acute psycologist, and in the second the genuine æsthetician, laying down, in a few words, the fundamental principles of musical æsthetics.

"As to Belmonte's aria in A major, 'O wie ängstlich, o wie feurig,' you know how expressive I have made it, indicating even the throbbing heart by means of the violins in octaves. This is the favourite air of all those you have heard, and mine also, and written expressly to suit Adamberger's voice. You hear the trembling, throbbing, swelling heart expressed by a crescendo; while the whispers and sighs are rendered by the first violins con sordini, and a flute in unison. The 'Janissary' chorus is, as such, all that can be desired—short and lively, and just suited to the taste of the Viennese. I have rather sacrificed Constanze's aria to the flexible throat of Mdlle. Cavalieri. The words 'Trennung war mein banges Loos' I have endeavoured to express so far as an outlandish bravura air will allow. I have changed the Hui into schnell, so it now stands thus: 'Doch wie schnell schwand meine Freude!' etc. I don't know what our German poets are thinking of; if they do not understand the stage, at least where opera is concerned, they certainly should not make their personages talk as if they were addressing a herd of swine."

"The overture is quite short, with alternate pianos and fortes, the Turkish music always coming in at the fortes.

It modulates through different keys, and I think no one will fall asleep over it, even if his previous night has been a sleepless one."

In a letter from Paris he writes to his father:

"The symphony began. Raaf was standing by me, and just in the middle of the allegro a passage occurred which I felt sure must please. The audience were enchanted, and there was a burst of applause; but as I knew at the time I wrote it, what an effect it was sure to produce, I brought it in once more at the close, and then arose shouts of 'Da capo!'

"Having observed that all concluding as well as first allegros here begin with full orchestra, and generally in unison, I made mine commence with only two violins, piano for the first eight bars, followed instantly by a forte. The audience, as I expected, called out 'hush!' at the soft beginning, and the instant the forte was heard unanimously began to applaud."

And yet, in the face of these proofs to the contrary, it is said this genius produced all his works by mere instinct! By these intimations in his letters, I have sought to demonstrate that he was observant and reflective, drawing his inferences from such habits, and at least in some instances was fully conscious of his artistic intentions. It is well known that he regarded "Don Juan" as his best opera, and therefore it is unlikely that of all portions of the work he would have treated the overture alone as a step-child. That it represents Don Juan's profligate and sensual life and actions all the world is agreed. But at the moment that I am about to enlarge upon a fact generally admitted, insisting upon the spirit of particular passages, and by means of a careful analysis bringing it to a clear and full recognition, I find myself face to face with conventional opinion, entertained even by men of genius, that though an instrumental work in its entirety may be indicative of a certain meaning, it cannot and should not have any definite signification in isolated passages. About the "should not" I shall not trouble myself, if I can only prove that Mozart took the liberty of actually doing it in the overture of "Don Juan."

That the spirit of the present desires and struggles for a more decided expression of definite objects in instrumental music, is a fact which is always becoming more evident in works of this kind. As yet the attempt has been made but timidly, and by way of experiment, through fear, it seems, of exceeding the dictum above laid down, by giving too much prominence to individual features of the subject selected, as well as to its clearly recognisable intention. What a confirmation of their intentions it would be to young composers; how it would encourage and strengthen them in their endeavours, if it could be demonstrated that what many are but now venturing upon with timidity was long ago determined upon and boldly accomplished by Mozart. Let us make the attempt!

In the first place it may be asked, How would one set about a verbal delineation of Don Juan's life and character? How could his hearers gain a clear conception of the story related, unless each situation and point described bore its relative significance?

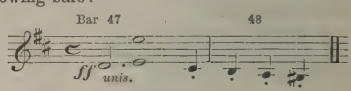
In the overture Mozart wished to depict Don Juan's life and habits, not, of course, as in a biography, by means of words, but, in its principal traits, symbolically by tones. These principal traits are so evident, even to those who have only a superficial acquaintance with the opera, that it is absurd to suppose that their intent should have been overlooked by Mozart, who more than anyone else must have made himself familiar with the contents and nature of the text of the opera. That the overture was written last is well known, if it is not true, as is generally believed, that it was written down in a single night.

The chief features of the opera are:

1. Don Juan's lust and pursuit of women.
2. His gormandizing propensities.
3. The inordinate love of pleasure and excitement, as instanced in his wanderings from country to country, and his habits of life.
4. The warnings and admonitions of Providence, consequent upon such behaviour.
5. His thoughtless disregard for and rejection of them. Like a moth, attracted by the flame, he revels in his lusts, and is at last caught and consumed.

I will first remark upon the warnings with which the dissolute fellow is met at almost every point in the opera.

Immediately at the outset his first love affair with Donna Anna has a fearful result. Instead of the expected enjoyment, he is driven to a duel and to murder, an event which must have had the most powerful effect upon his temper and disposition. Who can avoid seeing that this is typified in the two following bars?



Nevertheless this horrible occurrence makes not the slightest impression upon the frivolous Don Juan, and railingly he refuses to listen to the warning voice of Fate thereby expressed.

Can these four bars have any other meaning than that which so obviously harmonises with these two well-defined principal features of the action? If then they are really typical of these, was it not Mozart's intention that they should be so? Did he make them so unconsciously, or was it with the feeling that these four bars certainly belong to Don Juan, but what they mean I neither know nor care, for in instrumental music isolated passages express nothing; it is only when they have been heard collectively that one can become conscious of their intent?

Once for all it may be here remarked that I speak of imitative instrumental music, which, aided by the embellishing power of an artistic spirit, reproduces in a truthful manner only such objects as are already familiar to the hearer, and which the composer has taken from nature, or has created in accordance with the laws of nature by the power of his imagination.

If we pursue our examination of the above quoted short phrases in the score, so far as their technical resemblance makes it apparent that they belong to one another, and if, at the same time we observe the points of difference which manifest themselves in this resemblance, we perceive that they resolve themselves into three simple phrases, which, taken together, constitute a complete period. This section of twice two bars, immediately repeated in precisely the same manner, forms the first simple period (Bars 47—54). The repetition of this phrase in tones is as natural as if it were in words: "I warn thee! I warn thee!" and no less so is the repetition of the thoughtless rejection of the warning by him, whom it has not yet impressed.

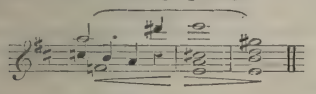
The less the effect of the admonitions of Providence upon the sinner, the oftener and more urgently they are repeated; so, in the opera, following the dictates of nature, the poet has done the same thing. For it is not immediately that Fate speaks to man of his doom, but by various occurrences seeks to convince him and make him conscious of his foolish or criminal purposes and actions. So it is that in Don Juan's later intrigues, Elvira, his forsaken love, constantly crosses his path and threatens him with exposure. His attempt upon Zerlina in the garden and at the ball fails; Mazetto and his comrades lie in wait for Don Juan and threaten to kill him; and even the Governor's ghost appears to him in the churchyard. Closer and more threatening the warning voices press upon him by degrees.

By repeating here, in close imitation, the two bars of the first period, which are clearly expressive of a terrible warning, can Mozart have had any other intention than that of intensifying the awfulness of the warning? Besides the terrible voices of warning, which so constantly thrust themselves upon him, Don Juan hears those of Elvira and Zerlina, who, in spite of his baseness, still cherish a secret affection for him. What Mazetto, Don Octavio, and the ghost seek to effect by threats of vengeance, these women hope to gain by tender entreaties.

Now let us consider the third period, which is closely connected with the second. Bars 61—68. What is the meaning of the concluding bars, which spring out of the "warning" passage?



What else but the sad and painful emotions arising in a woman's heart, when she finds that her tenderest entreaties have been disregarded, and that she must desist from her purpose as hopeless. I do not think a sigh drawn from the depths of the heart could be depicted by music in a manner more true to nature and at the same time more beautifully than in the first bar, nor the regretful relinquishment of fruitless endeavours in the second and third bars. And how harmoniously in accordance with nature is further expressed the transition from the horrible warnings of the previous periods to the tender entreaties of the third, by the choice of instruments employed, the marks of expression, the figure of the accompaniment and the course of the modulation!

Looking through the whole group of periods once more, we perceive that the two-and-twenty bars of which it consists, are, from a technical point of view, the direct result of the four bars with which it commences. (See Ex. 1 and 2.)

Inquiring into their meaning we find that they are symbolical of two principal traits of Don Juan's life. If, further we examine each period separately on its own account, we find that the second and third modifications of the first are expressed in the opera exactly in accordance with the dictates of nature.

I ask then—if my explanation is not altogether erroneous—can this great master have conceived these passages in the opera, which every practised musician recognises as an organic structure designed in accordance with fixed ideas, conformably to nature and clear as to their meaning, in the way he did without intending it? Was it really necessary that his genius should first fall asleep to enable him to produce, as it were in a dream, what everyone else acknowledges as referable to the words of the librettist and the situations suggested by him.

But if such an admission be erroneous, then also the assertion that instrumental music cannot depict any definite idea by means of a particular phrase, i.e. in a single period, has been fully confuted on the grounds of fact by reference to this single group of periods. Mozart has done it in this instance; it may therefore be done again in general. A more convincing proof of the perniciousness of this error is the fact that it may be shown that every period of the overture is similarly expressive of some particular situation in the opera. In its course the same group of periods, of which we have been speaking, appears four times more, but separated by other ideas, once only, however, in exactly the same form, but three times with certain alterations.

The first repetition resolves itself into three subdivisions, from bar 91 to 98, from 99 to 102, and from 103 to 110. The first of these subdivisions is characteristic of an admonition offered and rejected; the second depicts a more urgent warning, accompanied with threats; and in the third are heard the anxious entreaties and agonised cries of tender-hearted women, as if they saw destruction already pressing closer upon Don Juan. But at the same time a sportive phrase, typical of his rashness and frivolity, is heard from the violins, and nothing seems able to frighten this incorrigible sinner, for the greater the danger appears, the more boldly and insolently he behaves himself.

The death of Mr. Cipriani Potter, which occurred on the 26th September, in his seventy-ninth year, is an event which demands more than an ordinary notice of the fact. Mr. Potter lived so little for self-glorification that, although eminent both as a pianist and a composer, the influence he exercised upon the art he so deeply loved was more especially known to those who had the advantage of his valuable counsels, and who grew up in turn to spread the result of his teachings. As Principal of the Royal Academy of Music he invariably inculcated a love for the most classical works; and the respect inspired by his tuition was so uniformly coupled with a deeply-rooted personal attachment, that it will be long before his numerous pupils—amongst whom may be reckoned some of the most celebrated English musicians—can become at all reconciled to the void occasioned in artistic circles by his decease. It has been wrongly stated that Mr. Potter took lessons of Beethoven; but during his visit to Vienna, in early life, he profited largely by his advice and assistance in his studies. We have his own testimony in proof that the foundation of his pianoforte playing was laid by his father; but his natural qualifications were so great that, as a boy, he made himself acquainted with the compositions of the rising genius Beethoven, and was even introduced in Vienna as "the young Englishman who knew all his works by heart." Joseph Woelfl (under whom he studied for five years) often reproved him when he discovered that, instead of devoting himself to the pieces he had chosen for him, he was constantly practising Beethoven's then little-known Sonatas, and revelling in the new world of thought which they conjured up; and it may be readily imagined how his youthful reverence for the great master must have been afterwards strengthened by his personal intercourse with the composer and an intimate knowledge of his subsequent works. The pianoforte Concertos of Beethoven and Mozart were played by Mr. Potter in London at a time when classical music had but little place in the affections of the people; and his steady perseverance in the good cause earned for him the admiration of all true artists. His compositions were numerous; and many, originally produced at the concerts of the Philharmonic Society (of which he was one of the Directors), held a high place in the estimation of competent judges, and are now often performed, his fine Overture to "Cymbeline" having been given by the Society in June last, when the composer was called forward and warmly greeted by one of the largest audiences of the season. In 1859 Mr. Potter resigned his position as Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, but he continued to feel the warmest interest in the institution; and it was his greatest pleasure to converse, and even perform in private with, his former pupils. Although, as we have said, holding in reverence the works of the established masters, he was thoroughly liberal in his taste, and freely admitted the claims of modern writers, the compositions of Schumann being his especial favourites. As a teacher Mr. Potter was unrivalled. His perfect mastery of the instrument which he professed had been acquired in early life; but his admirable method of conveying instruction had been matured by many years of intelligent thought and acute observation. He made the fingers of his pupils sensitive to the minutest gradations of tone, not only by illustration, but by explanation of the principles upon which the various touches were produced. His fingering was founded upon a defined system, which could scarcely be misunderstood, because it was so ruled by the phrasing of the passages, that the two were inseparable. By constant watchfulness, he at once detected faults, and as quickly prescribed the remedy: he even foresaw difficulties which might probably arise in practice, and kindly suggested the best method of overcoming them. In a word, he taught his pupils to think; and, mindful of the great school over which he presided, he thus founded a generation of conscientious artists, whose doctrines, now spread far and wide throughout the country, time can only more firmly establish.

The funeral, which took place at the Kensal Green Cemetery on the 2nd ult., was attended by the Professors of the Academy, headed by the Principal, Sir William Sterndale Bennett, and many of the deceased's former pupils and friends. The scene at the grave was deeply affecting, for of all those gathered around there were none who could repress the feeling that not only one more link with the days of the great composers had been irrevocably severed, but that a true artist and a kind and generous man had passed away. Such sympathy is indeed the highest tribute that man can pay to man; and, although personal esteem should perhaps scarcely intrude itself where grief for the departed is so widely spread, the simple truth, derived from years of experience, that during his life he made many friends, and at his death he left no enemies, may be here recorded in taking the final farewell of his dear master by one of his most earnest pupils and admirers.

Henry C. Lunn.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The Saturday Afternoon Concerts at this establishment, which commenced on the 30th September, have been unusually interesting, the directors having resolved to devote the twelve performances to be given before Christmas chiefly to the works of Mendelssohn. The endeavour to present these as far as practicable in chronological order is an exceedingly wise determination, and has already produced good results, by making the public acquainted with some early compositions of the great master hitherto but little known. At the first concert the selection from the opera, "The Wedding of Camacho," composed by Mendelssohn in his sixteenth year, was almost a novelty to the audience, for although the overture is already familiar, and the graceful and melodious ballet airs have been played on a previous occasion at the Crystal Palace, the vocal music had not been performed before, and was indeed welcome to all hearers. These comprised a duet, "O youth, O season golden" (well given by Madame Rudersdorff and Mr. Vernon Rigby), a song, "If cool our blood" (excellently rendered by Mr. Vernon Rigby), and a scena, "Who knocks so lightly at the door" (sung with good effect by Madame Rudersdorff), all of which are full of dramatic character, and instinct with that refinement which, even at that early age, was so leading a feature in the composer's style. We need scarcely say how finely the orchestral works have been performed by Mr. Manns's well trained band, the "Reformation Symphony" especially being given with an intelligence and precision worthy of the highest praise. The pianoforte pieces have been ably rendered by Miss Agnes Zimmermann (who produced a marked effect in the "Rondo brillante" in E flat), Miss Kate Roberts, and Herr Pauer. The concerts have been well attended, and we have little doubt that this artistic appeal to the music-loving public will be warmly responded to.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

The Royal National Opera, which commenced at this establishment on the 30th September, has afforded one more instance of the futility of all attempts to found a home for the presentation of the works of English composers when the plan has not been carefully organised by persons competent to the task. We purposely abstained from commenting upon the enterprise in our last number, because, although by no means hopeful of its ultimate success, we did not desire to pre-judge its claims to public support; but now that it has had a fair trial, we consider it our duty to speak out unreservedly on the matter. With a feeble orchestra, a badly trained chorus, and solo singers, as a rule utterly unequal to sustain the principal parts, English versions of Italian Operas have been given, varied by a few works of native writers, most of which have been latterly worn threadbare by almost the same company at the Crystal Palace. By inserting the name of Mr. Arthur Sullivan as a conductor, and of Mr. Sims Reeves as a vocalist, the preliminary advertisements seemed to promise that English composers and English singers were co-operating in a cause which might produce good results; and the announcement by the management that on the opening night the impatient crowd had broken down the gallery door, and shortly afterwards that it had been found necessary to restore the pit, might have been accepted as proofs that the public had determined to support the lessee in his speculation; but the withdrawal of the names of the eminent artists mentioned from the bills, the perseverance with which such works as we have named were put forward night after night, and, above all, the sudden intimation that the whole company would after the 21st ult., be transferred to the Standard Theatre, at once decided the disastrous result which we had from the first predicted, and the Royal National Opera, in everything but the name, is therefore still an idea of the future.

But on the last night of the performance at the St. James's Theatre, a scene was enacted before the Opera which was not in the bills, but which, on account of its novelty at least, deserves record. As there were no apparent preparations for commencing a quarter of an hour after the curtain should have risen, the audience naturally became impatient, and after sundry vociferous calls for an explanation, a representative of the management appeared and announced that the members of the orchestra had refused to play until they had received their salaries. The assertion that it had always been the custom to pay them between the acts of the Opera, was received by a chorus of denial from the stage; and a few of the band appearing in the orchestra, it became a question whether the quarrel might not end in a fight. Silence, however, having been partially obtained, the spokesman on the stage appealed to the audience for a brief interval to arrange matters so that the performance should proceed. "Give me two minutes," he said, "to pay these wretched men, and the Opera shall be given as usual." Another long wait then occurred, relieved by some light badinage on the subject from the occupants of the gallery, and upwards of half an hour after the appointed time for beginning the Opera, the overture commenced.

We have no desire to enter into the merits of this extraordinary affair, and will content ourselves therefore with observing that if the money were ready in the theatre to pay the band, there could have been no possible reason why the matter should have been dragged before the public at all. Before closing our notice we must do full justice to some of the leading vocalists at this theatre. Miss Rose Hersee, Miss Blanche Cole, and Madame Florence Lancia would have been unreservedly welcome as highly accomplished operatic singers had they not been pitted against the Italian artists in most of their favourite characters. Miss Palmer has also won the good opinion of competent judges by her singing in several parts, and Mr. Nordblom possesses a good tenor voice, and is likely to be of service in an operatic company. Constant change has been the rule with the management from the opening night, the same work rarely being performed two successive evenings. As no novelty, either native or foreign, was given, this policy was perhaps the best that could have been pursued; but the bills were as perplexing as one of Bradshaw's "Guides," and we have known persons who actually went to the theatre without being able to find out what opera was acted or who was to sing.

At the late Church Congress at Nottingham one evening was especially devoted to the consideration of Hymnology and Church Music, the reading of the papers on the subject being made additionally interesting by several vocal illustrations, which were excellently given by members of the Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Mr. Adcock. The readers were Earl Nelson, Charles Longuet Higgins, Esq., the Rev. Edward Bickersteth, and Dr. Dykes, who supplied the place of Sir Gore Ouseley. Earl Nelson, the Rev. Mr. Bickersteth, and Mr. C. L. Higgins expressed their approval of an authorized hymnal for the Church, as tending to strengthen the feeling of unity. From Dr. Dykes's very able paper we regret that space will not allow us to make more than a few extracts. Speaking of psalm chanting, he observed that he at once found himself in a region of controversy as to the relative claims of Anglican and Gregorian chants. "I do not intend," he said, "to set myself up as the advocate for either system to the exclusion of the other, as I am convinced that both may and should be freely employed. There is one aspect of the question which I think has been too much lost sight of. The Psalter belongs to no time, or people, or age. It is neither ancient nor modern, rather it is both ancient and modern. It is the inspired prayer and praise-book of God's people in every time and place. Though mainly speaking the language of God's ancient church, it is yet the devotional manual of the whole mystical Body of Christ—that 'great nation,' as the sand of the sea, innumerable—that true and mystic 'seed,' out of every people and tongue, on whom the 'blessing of Abraham' eternally rests. The aspirations of each soul in that vast family here find inspired interpretation and utterance. 'Let there be,' says Hooker, 'any grief or disease incidental to the soul of man—any wound or sickness named, for which there is not in this treasure-house a present comfortable remedy at all times ready to be found.' The Psalter is of no 'private interpretation.' We seem to be recounting the Psalmist's individual experiences alone: we are really singing the mystical history, trials and temptations, sufferings and persecutions, triumphs and glorious ultimate universal empire of Christ and His Church. Now, I cannot but think that this œcumenical character of the Psalter should find some expression even in the music to which it is allied. Keeping, then, for the present to this line only, it appears to me that the melodies to which it is sung should be neither exclusively new nor exclusively old, but 'new and old.' It is plainly incongruous to confine these venerable hymns of God's ancient church, as many would have us do, entirely to modern post-Reformation—nay, to nineteenth century tunes; as though the Psalter were the peculiar heritage of the English Church of to-day. But is it not similarly incongruous to confine it to a very few ancient melodies of Christendom, as though the Psalter only belonged to the Latin Church? It seems to me that, on principle, we ought to use—at least there is no valid antecedent reason why we should not use—chants, ancient and modern alike, just as either may prove most convenient. I would then, for this as for every other reason, advocate the free use of either Anglican or (so-called) Gregorian melodies." Afterwards, in speaking of the necessity of the music of the church being reverent and appropriate, he said, "Much as I love music I am often disposed to wish it might cease altogether, when one hears solemn and touching words associated with the most uncouth crudities of many-noted plain songs, sung in octaves with incongruous and laboured organ harmonies—performances to which Mr. Macfarren's severe strictures are only too applicable, when he speaks of compositions which evince mistaken zeal, false antiquarianism, illogical deductiveness and ecclesiastical error. How far the opposite attempt to introduce the showy mass-music of Haydn and Mozart, with full orchestral accompaniments, is likely to tend to devotion and reverence and edification, I am afraid to hazard an opinion. I appreciate the motive—to give our best to God; and if orchestra and choir were angels all might be well. But is there not too much fear—taking us poor creatures, singers and fiddlers, at what we are—lest an intense act of worship, in which we sing on our knees, as it were, to Christ and with Christ, should degenerate into a mere occasion for sensuous and æsthetic gratification? Our church has a due regard for the comforting of such as delight in music by providing, in the anthem, a special musical offering where devout musical feeling may find its legitimate gratification. And I am quite disposed to think that, could our parish bands be generally restored, and utilised in our services especially on festive occasions, it would be a very good thing." Dr. Gauntlett, in a very eloquent address, recommended the formation of psalmody classes—classes for the direct practice of worship music—as the only safe and sure way of getting good congregational singing. The conclusion of his speech must be quoted at length: "There was a growth in song," he said, "nurture it, and it extracted the heart of song out of young and old. The aged must sing to encourage the young; the young must sing to comfort the old. Lastly, employ the young men. The organist had ten fingers; use one hundred and fifty other fingers in the restoration of the old and venerable Sunday orchestra in church. Why not have the shawms, and trumpets, and cornets, and psalmodic organs in worship? or in other words, the oboes, clarinets, violas, violoncellos, and horns of our present orchestra?' Work the strong hearts, heads, and hands of the parish. Above all, employ the women's voices, so pure, so graceful, so exquisite, possessing a charm far beyond that of the boys'. The one was the full blown flower, the other only the bud."

Some able remarks on the important question of Psalmody have lately appeared in the "Greenock Advertiser." The writer disagrees with the system of entrusting the music to the care of a Precentor, even should he happen to be a tolerably efficient person, and advocates the engagement of a salaried professional man as leader of the Psalmody. He also urges that the money left by General Reid to endow a Chair of Music in the University of Edinburgh should be directed to the formation of a National School for Music, of which the Reid Professor should be Principal, and expresses a belief that Government would come forward to aid such an object. Recent events in connection with our Royal Academy of Music will scarcely, we think, justify the most sanguine enthusiast in such a hope; but meanwhile the article, which is earnestly written, may have the effect of drawing attention to the subject.

The North London Philharmonic gave its first concert of the seventh season on Monday, the 2nd ult., at the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn Road. The programme included the Overtures "Semiramide," "Le Chevalier Breton," "Dichter und Bauer," and "Le Dieu et la Bayadere," three movements of Beethoven's first Symphony, and an orchestral selection from "La Traviata." The overtures were played by the large orchestra of the Society with commendable precision and care, especially Suppé's "Dichter und Bauer;" and the Adagio and Allegro of the Symphony were well deserving the applause which they received from a crowded audience. The vocal music was contributed by the quartett of the Society, Messrs. Gray, Platt, Hepburn, and Purdue, assisted by Miss Gaskin and Mr. Tremere, whose singing was much appreciated. The orchestral music was, as usual, conducted by Mr. Heath Mills, to whose industry must be attributed the success and development of the Society.

A Harvest Festival was held at the Church of St. Olave's and Allhallows Staining, Hart St., Mark Lane, on the 8th ult. Morning Prayer, Sermon and Holy Communion commenced at 11 a.m.; Litany and Sermon for children at 3; and Evening Prayer at 6-30; all of which were fully attended. The church was very tastefully decorated with corn, flowers and fruit, by the Rector and members of his family; and a new eagle lecturn was used for the first time. The Canticles and Psalms were well given, the Evening Psalms being sung to Goss's fine double chant in E. The hymns were Nos. 370, 360, 336, 223, and 238. Appropriate sermons were preached by the Rev. A. Povah and the Rev. W. H. Trendell. The offertories were given to the funds of the Eastern Dispensary, Leman Street.

On the 6th ult. the St. George's Glee Union held its Monthly Open Meeting at the Pimlico Rooms. The glees, &c., most deserving of mention were "Awake, Æolian Lyre," "My lady is as fair as fine," "Hard by a Fountain," Purcell's music to "The Tempest" (solos carefully sung by Mrs. Plass), "The fox jumped over," "Fair Flora decks," and "Once I loved a maiden fair," the latter being extremely well received. The programme was agreeably varied with songs and instrumental solos by professional and amateur members and friends of the Society. Miss Horder's rendering of "Bel Raggio" was much admired; and Mr. J. T. Beale was highly successful in "King Death," and "When Time hath bereft thee." Miss Annetta Frances also sang two songs; and concertina performances by Messrs. Spice and Williams, and piano solos and duets by Miss Hall, Mrs. Bridges, Miss Buley, and Mr. E. Paine were well played and much applauded. The large hall was crowded. The choral pieces were conducted by Mr. Bridges with much ability.

The Harvest Festival at St. Anne's Church, Poole's Park, Holloway, was celebrated on Sunday, the 15th ult., by two full choral services. The organist, Mr. J. H. Davison, and the choir deserve the highest praise for the manner in which they acquitted themselves in the musical part of the services. The chanting of the Psalms and Canticles was excellent, and produced evident signs of approval with the congregation. The Anthems in the morning were "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," by Macfarren; and in the evening "The Wilderness" by Goss; both of which were carefully rendered. The solo vocalists in "The Wilderness" were Mr. Brunt and Mr. Johnson, the former taking the bass and the latter the tenor solos. Mr. J. H. Davison, whose organ playing throughout was much admired, gave amongst other pieces, "With verdure clad" (Haydn), and "Let the bright Seraphim" (Handel.) A word of praise must also be given to the Masters Feuster for their singing of the duet "O lovely Peace" (Handel.)

An entertainment was given at Warlter's Road Schools, Camden Road, on Friday, the 13th ult. Miss Amy Weddle opened the first and second parts of the programme with the pianoforte solos, "L'Elisir d'Amore" (Thalberg), and "Danse Andalouse" (Ascher) respectively, and was highly successful in both pieces. Mrs. Maskell's reading elicited much applause, and Mrs. Parker Muncey in Boscovitch's song, "Sweet Nightingale," received a well merited encore.

A musical performance was given by the pupils of the London Society for Teaching the Blind to Read, at the Institution, Upper Avenue Road, Regent's Park, on the 20th ult., before a large audience. An excellent programme was provided, and all the pieces were most ably rendered. Mendelssohn's "Christus," and Bach's motett, "I wrestle and pray," were especially deserving of praise; and a pianoforte duet (performed by Messrs. W. Hart and G. Crafts) elicited marked and deserved applause. The music was conducted with his usual skill and judgment by Mr. Edwin Barnes, Professor of Music at the Society's schools.

The Brixton Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. William Lemare, announces a third season, with a highly attractive list of works to be performed during the series of four concerts. Members meet for practice at the Angell Town Institution on Monday evening in each week during the winter, and fortnightly during the summer months. The Society has largely increased during the past year; and the successful manner in which some of the best standard compositions have been rendered in the past is a sufficient proof that, with an enlarged choir, this admirably managed Association may be expected to command even more extensive patronage in the future. The season commenced on the 2nd ult.

The prospectus of the Oratorio Concerts announces that the ten performances to be given during the ensuing season will take place in Exeter Hall; and that the choir, under the direction of Mr. Barnby, will consist of about 500 performers. The best solo singers have been engaged; and it is gratifying to find that Mr. Sims Reeves will appear at each concert. The season will commence on Wednesday the 15th inst., with Handel's Oratorio, "Jephtha."

Mr. Mapleson has issued the prospectus of a short series of operatic performances at Covent Garden Theatre, which promises exceedingly well. Most of the artists heard last season at Drury Lane are included in the company, and Signori Tessèman and Stefano are also named, the former being cast for Idreno, in "Semiramide," and the latter for Kuno, in "Der Freischütz." In addition to her performance of some parts new to a London audience, Madlle. Marimon is announced to appear as Vespina, in Flotow's new opera "L'Ombra." The season commenced on the 30th ult.

The first concert of the season, in aid of the Victoria Hospital and other local charities, took place at the Pimlico Rooms, on Monday the 16th ult., under the direction of Messrs. Stein and Baucutt. Especial praise must be awarded to Miss Horder for her brilliant rendering of Rossini's scena, "Bel Raggio." Mr. R. Spice gave a solo on "Scotch airs," on the English concertina, which was enthusiastically redemanded; and Miss Hall displayed much ability as a pianist.

The third season of the Monthly Popular Concerts, held at the Angell Town Institution, Brixton, under the able direction of Mr. Ridley Prentice, commenced on Tuesday evening, the 24th ult., with an excellently arranged programme. The announcement of works to be given during the series of ten performances sufficiently shows that Mr. Prentice is resolved to lead the taste of his audience to the appreciation of the highest classical compositions, an object which should ensure the hearty co-operation of all real lovers of the art.

The "Musical Evenings," which have for some years been given with such success at St. George's Hall, are now established as one of the permanent attractions of the metropolis. The principal feature of the Association, as the prospectus informs us, is the maintenance of a String Quartet and Quintet party, and the attainment of a perfect rendering of Instrumental Chamber Music. In addition to extending a knowledge of the works of composers of established fame, a place will be given to the meritorious productions of lesser known writers; and artists of talent will also be afforded frequent opportunities of performing in public. An enterprise with such truly artistic objects, and so excellently organised, can scarcely fail to receive extensive support and encouragement. The first concert took place on the 25th ult.

The Parepa-Rosa English Opera Company commenced the season in New York on the 2nd ult. The prospectus announces that in addition to the operas already given by the company, many other foreign works have been adapted to the English stage, amongst which may be mentioned Cherubini's "Water Carrier," which has been translated expressly for the occasion by Mr. Arthur Baildon. Several well known artists have accompanied Madame Rosa from Europe; and there can be little doubt that the operas will be uniformly well cast. The conductor is Herr Carl Rosa, and Mr. Howard Glover is chorus master.

A legacy of £100 has been left by the late Mr. Cipriani Potter to the Royal Society of Musicians.

On Thursday the 5th ult. the Harvest Thanksgiving was celebrated in the Church of St. Edmund the King and Martyr, Lombard Street, which was very tastefully decorated with thank-offerings, consisting of wheat, vegetables and all kinds of fruit and flowers. Mid-day service, at 1 p.m., consisted of Te Deum, and sermon by the Rev. J. M. Rodwell, of St. Ethelburga. The choir, augmented by several city gentlemen, proceeded from the vestry (headed by the Præcentor, Mr. C. E. Tutill, who carried a magnificent bouquet of choice flowers) singing hymn 223, from "Hymns Ancient and Modern." After the sermon the choir re-formed, and the Recessional hymn, No. 335, was sung, bringing the service to a close. Full choral service, at half-past seven, commenced with the Processional hymn, "We march to victory;" the anthem, "O taste and see," by H. Westrop, was carefully rendered by the choir, the solo being especially well sung. The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. Hawes, of St. Lawrence Jewry, after which the Collection hymn was sung, followed by an anthem, "Thou visitest the earth" (Greene), which was given with much effect. The Recessional hymn was then sung, and the service concluded by the Organist (Mr. H. Westrop) playing Beethoven's "Hallelujah chorus."

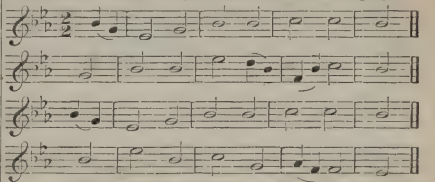
Christian Praise. Hymns and Tunes for Public Worship. The music edited by William H. Platt, and revised by James Flint.

The vigorous efforts now being made in the United States of America to create an interest in church music are, to judge by the number and quality of the hymnals now being produced in that country, as creditable to the industry and enthusiasm of those who are engaged in developing the movement as they are unfortunate in their effects. This journal has ever persistently advocated the necessity of taking into consideration the tastes of the people in forming collections of hymn tunes, but it has also never failed to urge that it is the higher and purer tastes which should be consulted, not the grosser ones. Many of the American collections would seem to prove that to pander to the worst tastes of the lower classes has been the only aim and endeavour of their compilers, the book now under notice being no exception to the rule. Melodies of the most feeble and vicious kind are mixed up with arrangements from the masses, oratorios, symphonies, and even operas of the great masters, and supplemented by some of the best of the modern hymn tunes, altered and mutilated in the most shameful manner. Who, for example, would suppose that any persons worthy in the smallest degree of the name of musicians would be guilty of the following travestie of Dr. Dykes's popular tune to the hymn "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty:"



and, to continue the illustrations, what is to be said of this as an instance of an attempt to be affecting?

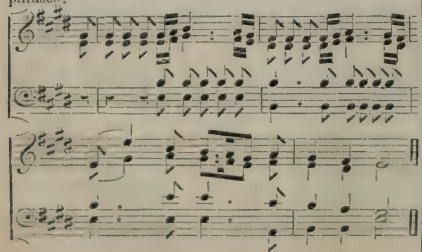
and the picturesque flourishes in the following form:

Opera is represented by an arrangement of Mozart's air "Qui sdegno," and is well balanced by an imitation of the florid contrapuntal style. Here are the concluding phrases:



One of the most familiar tunes in America exhibits so many like characteristics with a tune which has become popular at some of our best known London churches, that we fear to print it, lest that which is intended as a warning should prove a snare; for we are reluctantly obliged to confess that the clergy and musical profession in America do not enjoy a complete monopoly of bad taste in these matters. We would willingly have closed our notice here did we not feel it would be doing an injustice to the catholicity of taste which brings the two following tunes into sacred use, the first being an imitation of a popular part song "I love my love in the morning;" the other, containing the spirit and a good deal of the letter of the well-known comic song "Johnny Sands." We append two phrases of each tune:

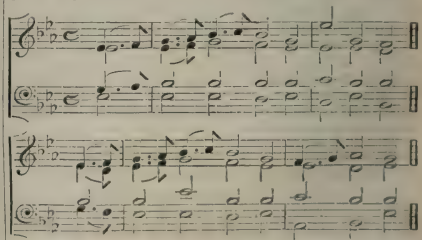
But for transcendent truculence the two phrases given below, which are intended to illustrate the words "O Thou, who hear'st the prayer of faith," appear to surpass every thing we have hitherto seen of the kind. It is necessary to take this choice specimen at the pace of a military quick step, and sing it loudly, to bring out the real effect:



We had hoped that the day for such books as this had long gone by, that organists were becoming sufficiently skilled in their art to distinguish good music from bad, and that the clergy, who seem to have so great a horror of every thing that is coarse, slipshod, and otherwise unscholarly in general literature, would endeavour to avoid giving any countenance to music of a like character. A few publications similar to this would tend to destroy any such reasonable hopes.

Compositions for the Piano,

BY

ANSELM EHMANT.

DEUX PENSÉES FUGITIVES. No. 1, 2s. 6d.; No. 2, 2s. 6d.

LES MARIONETTES, Allegro Scherzando. Op. 18. 3s.

TROIS MORCEAUX CARACTÉRISTIQUES. Op. 17. No. 1. Zingarella. 2. Tristesse. 3. Alégresse. 6s.

"Deux Pensées Fugitives. By Anselm Ehmant, op. 19 (Novello, Ewer and Co.).—These Pensées are fairly well written; not brilliant nor imposing, but rhythmical, graceful, and altogether neatly constructed. No. 1 is a little piece in the key of F, six-eight time; and No. 2, which we prefer, a dainty little thought in the key of A, common time.

"Les Marionettes, Allegro Scherzando. By Anselm Ehmant, op. 18. (Novello, Ewer and Co.)—B minor is a characteristic key, and Mr. Ehmant has put it to good use. His piece is full of character to the brim, overflowing; almost (let it be confessed) at times a grim character, but well sustained and clearly developed. Whether the music fairly suggests the subject in hand, we must leave to those thoroughly conversant with 'Les Marionettes.'

"Trois Morceaux Caractéristiques. By Anselm Ehmant, op. 17. (Novello, Ewer and Co.).—In his first morceau Mr. Ehmant again uses the characteristic key B minor. His theme here is 'La Zingarella,' and consequently needs a key with a character of its own. We like the morceau much, and nowhere more than where the original key is deserted for the nonce, for the brighter one of G major. No. 2, 'Tristesse,' in F minor, is well named, and contains much that is new as well as triste. No. 2, 'Alégresse,' in B flat, is remarkable for grace and refinement, and for the skill with which its interest is maintained from first note to last. The whole trilogy of pieces reflects credit upon its author's musicianship."—The Queen.

Festival Service in D. (Cantate Domino and Deus Misereatur.) By Henry Gadsby.

This work was written for, and performed at the Festival of the Corporation of "The Sons of the Clergy," held in St. Paul's Cathedral in the spring of this year. As Mr. Gadsby was formerly a chorister of St. Paul's, it must have been specially gratifying to members of the choir, lay and clerical, to have heard so meritorious a work from the pen of a former alumnus, pealing through their magnificent church. This festival service is of a high order of merit, every passage being coloured by the touches of a real artist, while throughout there is the stamp of thorough originality. Its originality may, perhaps, somewhat stand in its way, for it is quite possible that many listeners would fail, after only one hearing, to give it the praise it deserves. To such the best advice would be—hear it again and again. The opening of the Cantate is free and bold, the answer alla rovescio, to the subject proposed for imitation, being novel. At the words commencing "Praise the Lord upon the harp," the parts not occupied with the first part of the words are repeating to an appropriate theme, "with trumpets also and shawms." The words "Let the sea make a noise," are set to a fine sequence, which produces the most stirring effect, and culminates unexpectedly and freshly on a chord $\frac{6}{4}$. An original theme is linked to the words "With righteousness shall He judge the world," which is carefully worked out. The Gloria must be pronounced altogether a fine piece of writing, the solid movement of the voices to the words "world without end," making a solemn contrast to the contrapuntal treatment of the other parts. The "Deus Misereatur" is not a whit behind the Cantate in richness of thought. The words are wedded to highly dramatic music, although there seems to be no effort or straining after undue effects. The Gloria of the Cantate, which it would be certainly a difficult matter to improve upon, is used for that of the "Deus Misereatur." The manner in which the resources of a "double choir" are handled throughout both canticles is worthy of unqualified praise. It is easy to see that in Mr. Gadsby there is all that is necessary for an eminent composer; and it is to be hoped that he will not let his pen lie idle until he is better known and appreciated.

Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way? Anthem, by Henry Hiles. (No. 26 of Novello's Octavo Anthems.)

This Anthem commences with a very melodious tenor solo, supported by a free, but smoothly written, organ part. The chorus enters on the words "even by ruling himself after Thy word," to a phrase which is twice repeated at the interval of a minor third, thus involving a bold but highly satisfactory enharmonic change. After this the tenor solo again enters, and is ingeniously interlaced with the chorus to the close. The whole Anthem will be found sweet and pleasing.

O Lord, our Governour. Full Anthem, by Henry Gadsby. (No. 25 of Novello's Octavo Anthems.)

Throughout the whole of this Anthem there breathes a spirit of fresh and genuine music, which raises the work much above the ordinary character of short compositions of its class. Although easy and unassuming, its masculine vigour renders it a substantial and really valuable addition to church music. The more Mr. Gadsby gives us of such sterling stuff the better.

I did call upon the Lord. Anthem for four voices, by T. Mee Pattison.

The phrasing and general treatment of the words are exceedingly satisfactory, but Mr. Pattison has not been very happy in the form and style of this Anthem. With a better model he will undoubtedly produce better results. The vocal parts lie well for the voices, and the part-writing is all that can be desired.

Te Deum Laudamus. Set to music by George H. Westbury.

An adequate musical setting of the great Ambrosian hymn is not the simple matter it would seem to be considered, if we may judge by the reckless way in which immature musicians attack it, and fail. The technical difficulties attending it are considerable, without mentioning the almost impossibility of rising to the sublime elevation of idea present in its every line; and yet it is the one Canticle which serves as a butt for the random shots of nearly every inexperienced marksman. Why do not musical students try the "Jubilate" the "Nunc dimittis" or even the "Benedictus"? But the "Te Deum," with its "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Sabaoth: Heaven and earth are full of the Majesty of Thy Glory." "Thou art the King of Glory, O Christ: Thou art the everlasting Son of the Father. Thou sittest at the right hand of God: in the glory of the Father." Who can rise to the splendour of this? It is no disparagement to Mr. Westbury if we say that, like the rest, he has failed in giving adequate expression to these stupendous thoughts, but his failure is not of the complete kind hinted at above. He may reasonably claim to be an able musician. His work proves that; and at the same time indicates that the subject was approached reverently, and with a just sense of the nature of the undertaking. From which remarks it may fairly be inferred that this "Te Deum," as a composition, is better than nine-tenths of its class.

A Communion Service. Composed by the Rev. W. Statham.

Were many such specimens of musicianship as this to come from priests of the Church of England, the reproach which has been urged against them, that as a body they are the most unmusical in existence, would soon lose its point. To speak of technical qualities first, this composition is not merely free from grammatical blemish, but displays a freedom and ingenuity in the management of the parts which could only result from considerable and varied experience: indeed nothing could be smoother or more carefully finished as a piece of work than this. What we have to find fault with is the low tone of colour the composer has used throughout. It is perfectly true the service is intended to be simple and easy of execution; but the most effective compositions of all time have in the main fulfilled these requirements. It would however be doing an injustice to dwell unduly upon this side of the subject. Mr. Statham has produced a service which reflects the greatest credit upon his musical attainments, and which would prove a useful addition to the repertory of any church choir.

Le Nozze di Figaro. A comic Opera, in Four Acts, by W. A. Mozart. Edited and translated into English by Natalia Macfarren.

We can readily imagine, as we are informed, in an "Editor's note," that the task of indicating the instrumentation in this work has been an extremely difficult one. A sufficiently good idea can be formed of the orchestral effects of many of the modern Italian operas by naming the instruments used in the most important vocal pieces; but it is an utter impossibility by such means to convey the faintest notion of the exquisite beauty and variety of Mozart's operatic scores. The plan adopted of placing a list of the instruments employed at the head of every piece is an exceedingly judicious one, and may induce many persons to listen for orchestral combinations which might otherwise pass unnoticed. As in "Don Giovanni," this edition is indebted to the recent German reprint of Mozart's scores for the valuable marks of expression and stage directions, matters which are often too much disregarded, even when these works are presented at our Italian Opera houses. The commendation we have bestowed upon the manner in which the operas that have already appeared in this series are edited is fully warranted in our notice of the one before us. In every respect it is a perfect realisation of what a pianoforte score should be. With the editor it has evidently been a labour of love, for the care bestowed upon the minutest points is obviously the result of a deep reverence for the genius of the composer. The paper, printing, and binding are everything that could be desired; and there can be no doubt that the volume will command an extensive sale.

The Song of Love and Death, from Tennyson's "Idylls of the King." Composed by A. C. Mackenzie.

It would appear like rashness in the highest degree to write and publish songs which rise, in general style, above the level of the ordinary English ballad. Composers of eminence seem to have been unable to resist the apparent necessity of producing this low class of composition, whilst great singers have never wearied of singing them, or the public of applauding them. We might go further and say that the Press has not unfrequently been found adding its approval. Happily, however, counter influences have been at work, and the songs of Schubert, Schumann, and Rubinstein, with other composers of kindred sympathies, have been silently making their way and undermining the baleful effects of this ephemeral school. Mr. Mackenzie's song may be taken, amongst others, as a proof of this cheering fact. It has evidently been inspired by the German school, the solid musicianly influences of which are apparent throughout. But, apart from this, there is an individuality which gives to the song its principal charm. Full of originality and pleasant harmonic surprises, it follows the sentiment of the words with singular fidelity, the setting of the phrase "I know not which is sweeter, no, not I," and the corresponding one, "O Love, if death be sweeter, let me die!" being especially happy. The symphonies and accompaniments are models of careful workmanship, and form a remarkable contrast to the common-place specimens which ordinarily do duty for them. It might be too much to expect that a song like this should become popular, but the quieter and more enduring success which waits upon all good things may reasonably be predicted for it.

Moore's verses have here received a thoroughly sympathetic musical setting, not the least merit of the song being the simplicity of the means adopted by the composer to produce effect. An appropriate melody is accompanied with a graceful undulating phrase, the monotony of which is in true keeping with the words. The harmonies, without ever being obtrusive, give much interest to the voice part throughout. Singers will thank us, we imagine, for drawing attention to a vocal trifle in which the poetry and music move together in such loving company.

Duet for Violin and Viola. (G major.) Composed by W. A. Mozart. Arranged as a Duet for the Pianoforte by Carl Reinecke.

Teachers who desire to inculcate a taste for classical music amongst their pupils should welcome these adaptations for the pianoforte of compositions originally written for other instruments, and feel doubly grateful when the task of arrangement has been undertaken by so accomplished an artist as Herr Reinecke. Those unacquainted with the work before us would scarcely imagine that it had not been composed for the pianoforte, so excellently do the passages lie under the hand, and so effectively are the parts distributed between the two performers. The themes of the three movements are sufficiently winning to delight all hearers, and the infinite variety in the contrapuntal effects will not only arrest the attention of thoughtful listeners, but will prove most valuable practice for students who wish to escape from the conventional "brilliancy" of the day. We cordially recommend this duet as one of the best arrangements of standard works we have yet seen.

Cramer, Wood and Co.

Cramer's Popular Tutor for the American Organ.

A very good Instruction Book for this popular instrument, containing a description of the Stops, use of the Bellows and all necessary information for performers. In the remarks upon style and expression we have some judicious directions as to the compositions most suitable for instruments of this class. "Staccato music," it is observed, "is not effective unless executed with the greatest care, chords played thus often conveying no coherent sound or expression to the ear. It may, however, be employed with good effect when the melody or top note or notes of any chord are kept down and well sustained, giving the resemblance of a solo and accompaniment." Were this truth more generally acknowledged, those domestic organs might be made a source of infinite pleasure in many drawing-rooms where they now only cause irritability and annoyance. In the "Outline of the Rudiments of Music" we regret that such an announcement as that "A minor has three sharps" should have occurred (page 9), for, although it is doubtless a printer's error, it would be apt to lead many young pupils astray. Some of the harmonies in the lessons, too, should have been revised before publication, and we should not then have encountered two such fifths as occur in the 7th bar of "Jerusalem the Golden," where the melody is D, E, and the bass G, A; and we should have preferred the absence of the fifths in the air "Who'll watch the Rhine" (7th bar), A, E—G, D—, as part-writing intended for students cannot be too carefully guarded.

Lamborn Cock and Co.

The Scented Vine. Song. Words by the Hon. Mrs. G. Gifford. Music by Louise.

We do not know who "Louise" may be, but she writes well enough to warrant her in placing her name in full upon the title-page of her next composition. There is feeling both for melody and harmony in her unpretending little song; and vocalists will consult their interest by becoming acquainted with it. The composer may, perhaps, do better on some future occasion, but if she only do as well, we shall be perfectly ready to greet her with a cordial welcome.

Rudall, Carte, and Co.

On the Structure of a Sonata. By G. A. Macfarren.

The name attached to this pamphlet will be a sufficient guarantee of the value of its contents. Commencing with a short history of the Sonata, Mr. Macfarren proceeds to define the term, and having ably justified its right to occupy in the present day the place which at least for two centuries it has held in the estimation of all art-lovers, he gives a careful analysis of the various movements usually included in this form of composition, and concludes by referring the reader to the copious writings of those theorists who have treated the subject at full length "for minute details and special exemplification." We trust that all young composers will act upon this advice; but meantime we counsel those who do not desire to go more deeply into the matter to consult this little book, where they will find information which will lead them to appreciate the meaning and form of a Sonata with sufficient clearness to make them not only better performers but better listeners.

Original Correspondence.

ORGANISTS' SALARIES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Sir,—Whilst I agree with the remarks you added to the letter of "An Observer," I cannot but think there is another side to the question, which your correspondent has not seen. First, the office of Organist generally means a good position and corresponding support. It will surely be granted that an Organist cannot reasonably expect that for the duty required of him, in nine cases out of ten, he is to receive a stipend that would relieve him from all other work. If he is paid for his services to the church according to the time he usually bestows upon it, and at the same rate as he would charge if he were giving music lessons, he has no sufficient ground of complaint—perhaps there are some cases when he is not so remunerated: such I should not defend (though, no doubt, in such cases there are "considerations" which have weight); but I am acquainted with many Organists and know that the salaries they receive are in due proportion to their usual charges for instruction. But I should like to ask "An Observer" if he thinks that Organists as a rule discharge their duties in such a way as to lead the clergy to interest themselves in procuring for them higher stipends than they have at present? Do they play ably and reverently? Speaking of provincial Organists, I venture to say that very few of them have obtained a proper and sufficient knowledge of organ-playing. Why, Mr. Editor, I have met with Organists, and these holding responsible positions too, who were unequal to a pedal obbligato, and could not for their lives lead out a hymn tune as a left hand solo, knew little or nothing of such writers as Hesse, had no regard for Rink, and had never played from three staves. And then, what is the general style of playing that you get from the average Organist of the provinces, taking him at a salary of from £20 to £40 a year. The pieces he plays are of the light, unorganlike character. He is fond of movements from pianoforte sonatas, and always the most unsuitable of these unsuitables. You often hear him strike the notes of a chord one after another, especially the first chord which he puts down gradually, beginning with the pedal note and going slowly upwards. I can never help thinking he does this to show that, like Uriah Heep, he is "very 'umble." Sometimes he balances (?) his stops so that the accompaniments drown the solo, whilst at other times it is impossible to hear anything but the blast of some terrible reed. When he is accompanying the hymns and chants, he has sundry stereotyped flourishes which he brings in, oftenest with the flute, between the verses—just as a boy whistles "for want of thought." But all this is nothing to the treat we get when he begins to extemporize. He is superior to the rules of harmony and is not long in demonstrating the lofty position he takes. Now and then consecutive 5ths are heard across the key-board in the most astounding manner; sometimes the bass and treble drop in with each other quite unexpectedly, like old sweethearts at Brighton, and enjoy a moment's bliss in the happiest of octaves; whilst here and there dominant sevenths leap up—as if they were so many salmon going to spawn—bar after bar, if bars they can be called that time have none. Of course he disdains such mechanical studies as counterpoint and fugue; consequently, in his extemporaneous effusions he never stoops to take a subject, and thus escapes that crux of ordinary minds, viz., treatment. He is therefore at liberty for showing off the stops and his own powers of execution. Generally he begins with the louder stops of the swell; the trumpet and cornopean are his favourites. When he has thus gone through the swell in chromatics, varied with reminiscences of songs from the opera, done to the death with the Tremulant, he changes about and takes to too-tooing on the flutes: here he is thoroughly at home. What arpeggios he can skip through! what rapid scales! what delicious shakes! He completely takes away the dulness of the place and the occasion, and under his fascinating influence, you feel just as if you were sitting by the drawing-room fire listening to a new piano.

To speak seriously, the playing we are often compelled to listen to in some of our churches is simply abominable, and well nigh blasphemous. Let Organists learn to discharge their duties in an efficient manner and in a religious spirit, and let them try to work together with their clergy, with the view of obtaining devout and hearty services, and then they may reasonably expect the clergy to interest themselves in removing whatever, in some exceptional cases, they may have to complain of.

Yours very sincerely,

CLERICUS.

"MASONIC MUSICAL RITUAL."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

SIR,—I cannot hold myself responsible for a work when the publishers do not send me proof sheets that it may be corrected. The copy which you received of this work is not as I have written. Notes are omitted everywhere, naturals, flats, and the like are misplaced or omitted; one whole bar is different. The work has since received MY revision, and will be ready in a day or two.

Yours truly,

F. ATKINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL TIMES.

Oxford, 21st October, 1871.

SIR,—Will you allow me a short space in your columns to offer a few hints about the real meaning of the word Andantino? Your reviewer in criticising "A Manual of the Theory of Music" (p. 245 of your number for October), remarks: "Mr. Sutherland has fallen into the usual error of saying that Andantino is 'slower than Andante.'" I have more than once heard a doubt expressed respecting the relative tempi which these words denote, and I hope that, if I do not satisfactorily prove that Andantino is by derivation and usage slower than Andante, I shall at least draw the attention of your readers to this disputed point, and induce some more competent authority to offer an opinion. Firstly, by derivation, the termination ino in Italian is certainly a diminutive; but then the meaning of Andante is not slow, but (literally) going. It is an Italian adjective derived from the verb Andare, to go. Consequently Andantino means not going so much, i. e. with less movement than Andante. Secondly, by usage. A glance through the works of the great masters will show the character of the music to which the word Andante is prefixed; but it will require a somewhat more careful search to collect sufficient examples of the use of Andantino, which is a word of comparatively recent growth, and of much less frequent employment. If I am not mistaken, Handel and Beethoven never use the latter term. It is naturally more often to be found in the works of Italian composers, to whom we must look as authorities in the employment of their own adjectives. It will be found that by them Andante is, with barely an exception, prefixed to music that has a flowing pastoral motion; Andantino to music of a slower character. The restrained motion of the Andante, so different from the fiery rapidity of the Allegro, has caused many persons to consider its meaning synonymous with that of Lento. Hence they infer that Andantino is not so slow as Andante, which would be true enough had they not mistaken the essential meaning of Andante. Fear lest the authority of your critic should shake your readers' faith in the instruction-books of their childhood must be my apology for troubling you with so long a letter.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

MUS. BAC. OXON.

[It is very true that the word Andante means literally going; but if the literal interpretation of it were taken when applied to music, it could with equal truth be placed at the head of every composition that ever was written. The use of these Italian words is to express at what speed the piece is to go; and amongst those selected for the purpose, Andante has taken its place as indicating moving at a slow pace, and consequently Andantino means moving at a pace not so slow. For my part I candidly confess that I have but little faith in the instruction-books of my childhood, for they were but rarely written by persons who could lay down the rules of the art with any logical power. If "Mus. Bac., Oxon.," wishes for an authority on the subject, let him turn to Koch's "Lexicon," where he will find the following definition: "Andantino;—etwas geschwinder," which signifies somewhat faster than Andante].

[THE WRITER OF THE REVIEW.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

 Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.*

We beg to remind our correspondents that all notices of country concerts, whether written or extracted from newspapers, must be accompanied by the name and address of the person who sends them.

Our correspondents will greatly oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all Subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music pages are always stereotyped, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

Una.—Our correspondent, who is, we presume, a reader of the "Musical Times," should be aware that we do not notice manuscript musical compositions, and that all communications to us must contain the real name and address of the writer.

We regret that we cannot insert many accounts of musical entertainments which have been forwarded to us without any date. One, clipped from the "Scarborough Gazette," containing an interesting notice of the annual Cottage Hospital Concert, we should have been especially glad to give publicity to.

Mr. Charles Lunn's communication arrived too late for our present number.

Brief Summary of Country News.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this Summary; as all the notices are either collated from the local papers, or supplied to us by occasional correspondents.

Acock's Green.—The Acock's Green Choral Society, which was formed originally out of Mr. T. G. Locker's singing class, held its third annual meeting at the School Room, Rushall Lane, on Wednesday evening, the 4th ult. In the absence of the President (Mr. Walter Graham) the chair was taken by Mr. Hipkiss, and there was a large attendance of members. The balance-sheet, as read by the Secretary (Mr. S. Brame), showed a satisfactory balance in hand, and the profits resulting from the concerts given on behalf of the piano fund, have enabled the committee to reduce the debt on the instrument to a very small sum. During the year a considerable increase of members has been obtained, and it is evident that the Society is well appreciated by the residents of Acock's Green and the district. The works rehearsed during the past season were Gounod's Messe Solennelle, Mozart's Twelfth Mass, Handel's Messiah and Judas Maccabæus, and Mendelssohn's St. Paul. In replying to the vote of thanks for his services and his re-election as conductor, Mr. Locker said that at the last annual meeting he had the pleasure to congratulate the members on the marked increase of their efficiency, and now it was his privilege to say that not only had they maintained that position, but considerably advanced during the past year. This he attributed in no small measure to the very admirable manner in which they were accompanied by Mrs. Brame. Votes of thanks were warmly accorded to the retiring officers, who were in the main re-elected. At the conclusion of the business, the rehearsal of St. Paul was resumed.

Adelaide, Australia.—The adjourned annual meeting of the Adelaide Philharmonic Society was held in the Refreshment-Room, Town Hall, on Thursday, the 27th July, Mr. R. J. Scott in the chair. The printed report of the committee, and the balance-sheet, stated that the total receipts of the Society amounted to £390, and that, after paying the whole of the liabilities, a balance remained of £71 14s. 9d. During the two years the Society has been in existence it has deposited towards an organ fund, £101. Mr. Kay moved, and Mr. Holden seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. Burrell, the retiring secretary, passing a high eulogium upon the very efficient manner in which he had performed his duties. Mr. Pilgrim moved, and Mr. Howie seconded, a vote of thanks to the treasurer, librarian, and committee; and Mr. Colton moved, and Mr. Lyons seconded, a vote of thanks to Mr. E. Spiller, conductor, expressing a hope that that gentleman would long be spared to wield the baton, and otherwise interest himself for the benefit of the Society. Mr. Spiller replied, and thanked the members very warmly for their expression of satisfaction. The desirability of incorporating the Society was then considered, and, after some discussion, this course was decided upon, Mr. Hatchett being appointed solicitor, and Mr. R. J. Scott trustee. The election of officers for the ensuing year was then proceeded with.

Ashton.—The first concert of the twentieth season of the Gentlemen's Glee Club was given on the 18th ult. Several glees and part-songs were sung with much effect, and Miss Clelland elicited warm applause in all her vocal solos, her rendering of Bishop's "Bid me discourse" and Gounod's Serenade being especially worthy of praise. A great feature in the concert was the violin performance of Mr. Iles, his facility of execution being well displayed in a Fantasia on Scotch airs, by M. Sainton. Mr. Irvine Dearnaley conducted with his accustomed ability.

Bedford.—Mr. P. H. Diemer gave an evening concert at the Assembly Rooms on the 5th ult. The chief feature in the programme was the pianoforte performance of Mr. Diemer, who selected for his solos Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante in B minor, the first movement of Beethoven's Concerto in C, and two sketches of his own composition, called "Absence" and "Return," in all of which he was highly successful. The concert-giver was assisted in the instrumental department by Mr. F. Folkes and Mr. T. Watson (violins), Mr. Barnett (viola), Mr. Gough (violoncello), and Mr. Castell (contra basso). Miss Sophie Ferrari and Mr. Frank Holmes elicited much applause in their vocal solos, the former receiving an unanimous encore for her excellent rendering of Sullivan's "Maiden's Story."

Belfast.—On the 13th ult. the Misses Richardson's concert took place in the Music Hall, which was very fully attended. The concert-givers were assisted by Madlle. Bertha Brousil (violin), Herr Rudolph Mayer (violoncello), and several amateurs, both vocal and instrumental, whose execution of the various pieces allotted to them was in the highest degree successful. Miss Richardson gave several soprano solos with much effect, amongst the most prominent of which were Handel's "Angels ever bright and fair," and Benedict's "I'm alone," from the Lily of Killarney; and her sister, Miss M. E. Richardson (a contralto), elicited much applause in the song from St. Paul, "But the Lord is mindful," and "He is on the lonely deep," by K. L. Ward. Madlle. Brousil and Herr Mayer were enthusiastically received, the latter eliciting an encore for a fantasia by Goltermann. Dr. Kerbusch was an efficient conductor.—The Ulster Hall, on the 16th ult., was completely filled in balcony and area, and those who were present had every reason to congratulate themselves on being there to enjoy the rich musical treat provided for them. For some time past the musical public have looked forward to the appearance of the renowned organist, Mr. Best; and when he came on the orchestra of the Ulster Hall he was received with prolonged applause, which was renewed at the conclusion of his first piece, Bach's Toccata in F major. The "Tema con variazioni" from Serenade for flute, violin, and viola, by Beethoven, which was listened to by the audience with the most profound attention, having been loudly applauded, Mr. Best played Handel's "O, ruddier than the cherry," to the evident delight of the audience. His next performance was the overture to William Tell, and here again his command of the instrument and knowledge of the orchestral effects that could be produced from it were well shown; and, in response to the tumultuous applause which greeted him at the finish of the overture, Mr. Best kindly repeated a portion of it. The two pieces which ended the programme were compositions of the talented performer, "Venite in Bethlehem," and "Psallite, omnes Angeli," and, had they been given earlier in the evening, could scarcely have escaped the re-demand to which their beauty would have entitled them. The vocalist for the evening, Mrs. Warren, created a most favourable impression. She has a fresh sympathetic soprano voice, which she uses with great skill. In response to a most enthusiastic encore after her first song, "Say, what shall my song be to-night?" (Knight), she repeated the second verse. Her other two songs, "What tho' I trace" (Handel), and "Oh, how delightful" (Molloy), were also extremely well rendered, Mr. Best's accompaniment to Handel's song enhancing its effect very much. Mrs. Robinson played the accompaniments to the other two songs with her accustomed good taste.

Bradford.—On the 19th ult., the first concert of the season of the Bradford Choral Society took place in St. George's Hall. The works selected for performance were Gounod's Messe Solennelle, and Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night. Mr. De Jong's band had been brought from Manchester to give effect to the performance, and the chorus mustered in full strength. Mr. A. Moorhouse was at the organ, and Mr. Broughton conducted. The soloists were Miss Amy Empsall (Mrs. Joe Eckersley), Miss S. Illingworth, Mr. H. Walker, Mr. E. Linck, and Mr. Thornton Wood. The performance opened with Handel's overture, Samson which was well played. The Messe Solennelle followed, and was sung throughout with considerable care and discrimination. Miss Empsall interpreted her music with true devotional feeling, Mr. H. Walker sang creditably, and Mr. Thornton Wood was in excellent voice. The solos in the Walpurgis Night were taken by Mr. E. Linck, Miss S. Illingworth, and Mr. Thornton Wood. The chorus of guards and people, "Come with torches brightly flashing," was magnificently rendered by chorus and band. Mr. Wood's finest solo was perhaps "Restrained by might," the concluding words, "Thy light shall shine for ever," which finished the composition, being delivered in the grandest style.

Braintree.—On Wednesday the 18th ult., a most successful concert was given at the Lecture Hall. The vocalists were Miss Blanche Owen, Mr. Arthur Thomas, and Mr. G. S. Graham; Mr. Winney accompanied. The hall was well attended by the élite of the neighbourhood.

Brighton.—Seldom has the Dome and its neighbourhood presented a more animated appearance than on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., when a "Service of Sacred Song" was given. As early as seven o'clock the long train of junior choristers began to arrive, and by half-past seven the vast mass of children was comfortably seated. The service was advertised to commence at eight o'clock, but long before the time arrived the room was packed in every available space, so that several hundreds were unable to obtain admission. At eight o'clock precisely the Rev. J. Wilkins opened the service with prayer. The book used on this occasion is one compiled by W. H. Davies, Esq., of Hampstead. It consists of connected readings from the "Life of Christ," as contained in the four Gospels, and is interspersed with music and words, suited to the various incidents in the first year of Christ's public ministry. The Rev. J. B. Figgis commenced the reading, and at a sign from the conductor (the compiler of the work) the children rose and sang, with admirable precision, a piece entitled "Glory to God," followed immediately by "Hark the herald angels sing." The whole of the programme was performed very creditably, but especial mention must be made of "Brightest and best," "Forty days and forty nights" (opening strain of Kyrie from Mozart's Twelfth Service), and the chants, "Blessed are the poor in spirit," and "Our Father." The chanting was exceedingly good throughout. W. H. Davies, Esq., conducted his 1000 voices in a very able manner, and his son, Mr. W. H. L. Davies, accompanied the choir on the grand organ.

Buxton.—The first concert in the new Pavilion was given on Thursday evening, the 21st September, under the able direction of Mr. Philip Klitz, organist of St. John's Church. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Cowley Squier, Madlle. Marie Gondi, and Mr. Carlos Lovatt, all of whom were highly effective in several solos and duets, especially in the selection from Mr. Klitz's Operetta, The Bride of Venice. The band of the 4th Dragoon Guards played some well arranged pieces during the evening, a Waltz, called "The Buxton Season," the composition of the concert-giver, being received with much applause. Mr. Klitz accompanied the vocal music with good taste and judgment, and was thoroughly successful in a concertina solo. The Hall was very fully attended.

Calcutta.—The organ at St. Paul's Cathedral was re-opened on Monday, July 3, after undergoing extensive repairs and improvements. There was full choral service, the cathedral choir being assisted by the choirs of St. John's and St Stephen's, numbering altogether between fifty and sixty voices. The Psalms were chanted to Savage and Battishill; the Magnificat, Hayes; Nunc dimittis, Hine. The Anthem was "O taste and see," by Goss, which was sung exceedingly well. The service was intoned by the Rev. S. Dyer, and a most interesting sermon was preached by the Rev. B. Aday. The Cathedral was filled, and an excellent collection was made in aid of the organ repairs fund. Mr. Frye, the organist, accompanied the services with much taste and discrimination, reserving the powers of his instrument for the Voluntaries played whilst the collection was made. Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts," and the Offertoire in G. by Lefébure-Wely, which, with the concluding Voluntary, Handel's "Hallelujah," were most skilfully performed. Mr. Frye has since given a series of Organ Recitals at the Cathedral, which have proved highly attractive to the lovers of classical music.

Camborne.—A sacred concert was given by the Camborne Choral Society, on Tuesday, the 17th ult., in the Assembly Rooms. The first part consisted of Rossini's Stabat Mater, which was excellently performed throughout, the most commendable features being Mr. Harvey's rendering of the "Cujus animam," and the singing of Miss A. Mitchell in the "Fac ut portem." Both the quartetts were well executed, as was also the "Pro peccatis" by Mr. H. A. Smith. The remaining solo parts were sung by Mrs. Burge, Miss Trevillion, Miss Mitchell, and Messrs. Treleaven and Thomas. The second part was miscellaneous, and commenced with Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Hear my prayer," the solo part of which was expressively delivered by Miss A. Mitchell, and ably accompanied by Mr. G. J. Smith. The capabilities of the chorus were well displayed in the eight-part Psalm, "Judge me, O God," and also in a Motett of Gounod's, and "O great is the depth," from St. Paul. Miss Mitchell earned a well-deserved encore for "O rest in the Lord." Mr. J. H. Nunn, A.R.A., conducted with his usual ability.

Castle Blayney, Ireland.—A farewell concert was given to Mr. George E. Nixon, in the Town Hall, on the 29th September. The room was tastefully decorated, and every seat occupied. The programme was executed in a manner highly creditable to the conductor, Mr. Nixon, who presided at the pianoforte with his usual ability. In every respect the concert was a decided success.

Coventry.—A large audience assembled in St. Mary's Hall, at the concert of Mr. Ellis Roberts, the eminent harpist, on the 17th ult. Mr. Roberts's playing was much admired, and Miss Glanville, who was the solo vocalist, was highly successful in all her songs. This was the first entertainment of the autumnal series, to be given under the auspices of the Coventry Institute.

Darlington.—On the 29th September, a concert was given by Mr. J. E. Dent, in the Central Hall, before a large audience. The principal vocalists were Miss A. Clelland, Miss Pattie Hargreaves, Mr. Sutcliffe, and Mr. Brandon, all of whom were much applauded in the music allotted to them, Miss Clelland creating a marked effect in Bishop's "Bid me discourse," and Miss Hargreaves being equally well received in a ballad called "The Curfew," composed by Mr. Dent. Some cornet solos were well played by Mr. T. Hogg during the evening. Mr. Dent acted as an able accompanist.

Ecclesfield.—The Harvest Festival of this Parish was held on Wednesday, the 27th September, when the fine old church was most beautifully decorated by the Misses Gatty and other ladies. Divine Service commenced at 3 o'clock, the choir being assisted by the Oughtibridge Choir, numbering about fifty voices. The Psalms were chanted to Boyce in E, and Morley in D minor. The Canticles were sung to Bunnett's Service, which was greatly admired, and the Anthem was Gounod's "Send out Thy light." The Service was exceedingly well performed, the Psalms being sung with the utmost precision, and the Anthem and Tallis's Responses (which were given without the organ) showing that village choirs may be taught to sing with much delicacy and refinement. The prayers were intoned by the Rev. T. White, curate; the lessons were read by the Rev. Dr. Gatty, vicar, and the Rev. W. Knight; and an excellent sermon was preached by the Rev. Greville Chester. Mr. Hedgman presided at the organ, and the choirs were trained and conducted by Mr. J. H. Eyre, director of the Doncaster Choral Union.

Erdington, Warwickshire.—On the occasion of the Annual Bazaar, in aid of the funds of the Congregational Church in this thriving suburb of Birmingham, a performance of sacred music was given for one hour on each of the two evenings. The selection on the first evening included "With verdure clad" (sung with much taste by Miss Rigby); "If with all your hearts," from Elijah; and the Air, "Thou didst not leave," with the preceding recitatives, given by Mr. Hatley in excellent style; the Trio, "Lift thine eyes," and Quartett, "Cast thy burden," from Elijah; the plaintive Air, "Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets," from St. Paul (sung with good effect by Miss Cooper); and the "Agnus Dei," of Mozart's First Mass, which was expressively rendered by Miss Rigby and encored. The Chorus, "How lovely are the messengers," from St. Paul, was sung by a good choir, and the evening's music concluded with the performance of a sacred part-song, composed by Mr. F. J. Heathcote, which was repeated by desire on the evening following. On the second evening, the singing by Mr. W. E. Fisher of the "Cujus animam," and of the same gentleman and Mrs. W. Smith in the duet, "Children, pray this love to cherish," from Spohr's Cantata, God. Thou art great, was much admired. In addition to these, "He shall feed His flock," "He was despised," and "O rest in the Lord," were sung by lady amateurs with much truth of expression. The choral performances on this evening were "Incline thine ear," by Himmel, and Mozart's "Ave Verum," both pieces being rendered with the precision which can only result from careful practice. Financially, as well as musically, the experiment was highly successful.

Folkestone.—A Pianoforte Recital was given by Mr. C. H. Hayward, at the Town Hall, on the 25th September, assisted by Mr. W. H. Weist Hill (violin), and Miss Mina Poole. Mr. Hayward was highly successful in Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (No. 3, Op. 31), and also in the pianoforte part of two duets with the violin, the first by Macfarren, and the second by Beethoven. Mr. Hill elicited deserved applause in his duets with Mr. Hayward, and played with much effect a solo on airs from Maritana. The vocal portion of the programme was ably supported by Miss Mina Poole, who was encored in Verdi's "Ernani! involami!"

Hammersmith.—On Friday, the 29th September, the Harvest Festival was held in the Parish Church, which was very tastefully decorated for the occasion. The sermon was preached by the Rev. A. Baird, of Homerton. The usual hymns, &c., were sung by the choir, which was considerably augmented for the occasion, by several gentlemen who volunteered their services, one of whom (Mr. H. M. Cadman) rendered the solo in Dr. Greene's "Thou visitest the earth" with great effect. The offertory was in aid of the new schools in the Chancellors.

Harrogate.—A concert of sacred and secular music was given on Friday evening, the 29th September, in the new School-room, Church Square, by the members of Christ Church Choir, assisted by a few friends in the district. The principal soloists were Messrs. Calvert, Deighton, Gibbons, and Lawton. Herr Theodore Leifant gave, with much effect, two pianoforte solos. Mr. Matthew Arnold (organist of Christ Church) officiated as accompanist, the Rev. P. W. Hulbert presided at the harmonium, and Herr Muller conducted. The concert was given in aid of the new School, and under the patronage of the Right Hon. Baroness Burdett Coutts and other influential visitors.

Hereford.—The Michaelmas concert in connection with the Hereford Choral Society took place in the Shire-hall, on Tuesday evening, the 10th ult., in the presence of an unusually large and aristocratic assemblage. Mr. Townshend Smith conducted with his usual ability, and under the control of his baton the pastorale, "Autumn," from Haydn's Seasons, was excellently performed. The solo vocalists were Miss L. Broad, and the Revs. A. Robinson, T. M. Everett, and W. D. V. Duncombe; their singing being too well known to Hereford audiences to need additional praise on the present occasion. The second part of the concert was devoted to miscellaneous music; and the opening symphony in C (Beethoven) was very well performed. A solo by the Rev. T. M. Everett. "Vineta" (H. Smart), was loudly applauded and encored. The Rev. A. Robinson sang an equally effective ballad, "The Snow Flakes" (Pontet), which was also redemanded. The Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe was unfortunately precluded, by a severe attack of hoarseness, from taking part in the second portion of the programme. The part-songs were admirably rendered, and all of them gave the utmost satisfaction to the audience.

Liverpool.—The Seventh Subscription Concert of the Philharmonic Society was a most interesting inauguration of the autumnal season of these performances. The chief attraction of the evening was the introduction of a Sinfonia (in C minor) by Mr

F. H. Cowen, which was performed at the Crystal Palace Concerts in London, before the writer had completed his eighteenth year. The work is full of melody, and the orchestral combinations are most effective throughout. The "Allegretto con moto" was encored, and every movement was received with warm applause. The other instrumental works were also very interesting, consisting of Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, Nicolai's to the Merry Wives of Windsor, and Joachim's spirited and melodious March in D, No. 2. The principal vocal artists were Madlle. Marimon, Madlle. Fernandez, Signor Tesseman, and Signor Stefano, who were greatly applauded in their various performances. Signor Stefano displayed his voice to much advantage in Meyerbeer's Song, "Le Moine," the pianoforte accompaniment to which was exquisitely played by Mr. F. H. Cowen. Madlle. Fernandez and Signor Tesseman, by their charming rendering of "Si, la stanchezza" (Trovatore), made it one of the features of the evening. The choral members gave, with much effect, three excellent partsongs, Hatton's "Urchin's dance," Pinsuti's "Two Spirits," and Macfarren's "All is still," concluding with Handel's "Oh! waste not, pining lovers," from Deidamia.——The 8th subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society was given on the 17th ult. The principal vocal artists were Madame Colombo, Mr. Bentham, and Signor Agnesi; Solo pianoforte, Madlle. Carreno. The instrumental selection consisted of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, Mendelssohn's Overture, Ruy Blas, and his Pianoforte Concerto in G minor; Pianoforte Solo, "Polonaise in A flat" (Chopin), and Overture, Le Dieu et la Bayadère (Auber). Madlle. Carreno played Mendelssohn's Concerto with much fire and energy, and was encored in Chopin's Polonaise. The miscellaneous vocal pieces were excellently chosen, well performed, and highly appreciated, and the whole concert gave great enjoyment to the audience.

Monmouth.—In the Working Men's Institute, on Wednesday, the 18th ult., a lecture was given by Mr. Walter Lough on Church Music. After speaking of the influence of the art, the lecturer proved from Scripture that both vocal and instrumental music should be used in divine worship. Beginning from the time of David, and gradually coming down to the present age, with vocal and instrumental illustrations, the lecture was highly interesting. Mr. W. Lough showed his "Iconoclastical" spirit in condemning, as unworthy of the name of Church music, such psalm tunes as Hemsley, Prospect, and others. After giving "Rousseau's Dream" as a psalm, the lecturer played with much effect the same tune in its original condition, viz., as a jig from a French opera. The choir (30 in number) sang exceedingly well, reflecting great credit upon the conductor, which augurs well for the Choral Society lately formed by Mr. Walter Lough. The hall was quite filled with a large and attentive audience, and the applause was most enthusiastic throughout the evening; a vote of thanks being passed to the lecturer at the conclusion.

Newark.—Mr. S. Reay, Mus. Bac., Oxon., organist of the Parish Church, gave a Recital in that building on the afternoon of the 16th ultimo, before an attentive and appreciative audience. The programme was well selected from the works of the best writers for the instrument, and Mr. Reay's performance of the several pieces was in the highest degree successful.

Newbury.—The session of the Literary and Scientific Institution for 1871-2, was opened at the Mansion House on the 3rd ult., when Mr. Ellis Roberts, harpist to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, assisted by Miss Ellen Glanville, gave a musical entertainment. Miss Glanville was encored in several of her songs, which were given with much taste and feeling. The illustrations which Mr. Roberts gave of the musical and euphonious nature of the Welsh language were very amusing, and his performances on the harp were admirable. The audience was very numerous, every part of the large room being completely filled.

Plymouth.—Mendelssohn's Elijah was performed with much success, at St. James's Hall, on the 4th ult., by the Plymouth Vocal Association, under the able conductorship of Mr. F. N. Löhr. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Thaddeus Wells, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. Stanton, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. The choruses were excellently sung throughout, "He watching over Israel" and "The fire descends" being especially worthy of praise. The orchestra was highly efficient, the leader being Mr. M. Rice, of Torquay.

Pontefract.—A Choral Harvest Festival was held in the Church of All Saints, on Friday, the 29th September, when the following choirs took part in the Service:—Parish Church and All Saints, Pontefract; Ferry Bridge, Hensall, Womersley, and Badsworth, numbering about a hundred voices. The Anthem was Barnby's "O Lord, how manifold are Thy works," the Hymns 224 and 335 from "Hymns Ancient and Modern," the Canticles from the Doncaster Festival Book, and the Psalms from Ouseley and Monk. Mr. Fearn presided at the organ, and an appropriate sermon was preached by the Rev. Canon Woodford, D.D., vicar of Leeds. The festival, which was highly successful, was conducted by Mr. J. H. Eyre, of Doncaster, whose efforts to improve church music in this district are producing most gratifying results.

Reading.—Mr. Birch's new Operetta, The Wreck of the Argosy, was performed at the Town Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 3rd ult., and the following morning and evening. The principal vocalists were Miss Susanna Cole, Miss Agnes Broadhurst, Mr. Henry Manley, Mr. Theodore Distin, and Mr. Arthur Berry. A local paper awards much praise to the music; and, whilst congratulating Mr. Birch on his success, expresses an opinion that of the many operettas he has composed, this is undoubtedly his best work.

Savernake Forest.—A Choral Festival took place at St. Katherine's on Wednesday, the 18th ult. Evensong was at 3 p.m., and shortly after a procession was formed of surpliced choirs. The Processional Hymn was 386, from "Hymns Ancient and Modern," and on entering, the surpliced choirs seated themselves in the Chancel and formed the Decani, the rest of the choirs being already seated in the nave, and forming the Cantoris. The first part of the Preces were sung in plain-song, the remainder in harmony, the Præcentor (the Rev. G. Stallard) and the Rev. T. F. Ravenshaw officiating. The Psalms for the day, 92, 93, and 94, were sung to Gregorian tones, in unison. The Rev. T. W. Dowding read the first lesson (2 Chron. xx. 18—31), the Rev. A. G. Bleeck the second (Revelations v). The Magnificat and the Nunc dimittis were given to Wesley, in unison, except the last verse and Gloria Patri. The Anthem, from the 24th Psalm, "Lift up your heads" (Hopkins), was rendered by all the choirs. Hymn 378 was sung before the sermon, afterwards the Te Deum, by S. S. Wesley, and, during the collection of the Alms, Hymn 335; Hymn 304 was sung as a Recessional Hymn, the whole concluding with the voluntary, "Hallelujah to the Father," from Beethoven's Mount of Olives, ably performed by Mr. Walton, the organist and choirmaster.

Scarborough.—On the 17th ult. a highly successful performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus was given at the Spa Saloon, by the members of the Scarborough Choral Union. The vocal department was aided by the kind attendance of John Wilkinson, Esq. (basso); and the professional singers engaged were Miss Helena Walker (Mrs. Haddock); Miss Newbound, of Leeds; and Mr. Dumville, of Manchester. All the choruses were given with most commendable precision and vigour, especially "Fallen is the foe," "We never will bow down," and "Sing unto God." Mrs. Haddock in "O Liberty" and "From mighty kings," Miss Newbound in "Pious orgies," and Mr. Wilkinson in "Arm, ye brave," elicited the warmest marks of approbation. The orchestra, led by Mr. Shaw, was thoroughly efficient; and the work was conducted with much judgment by Mr. Naylor, Mus. Bac.

Sheffield.—On Thursday, the 12th ult., St. Paul's Church was re-opened for public worship by the Archbishop of York, the extensive alterations and improvements having been most satisfactorily completed. The event was one of unusual interest, and a very large congregation assembled. The hymns, commencing with the "Old Hundredth," were well given, and the fine organ was skilfully displayed by Mr. Walker. The instrument has been completed by Mr. Brindley, the well-known local builder; and now that it is brought to the front, its tone will be heard to the utmost advantage.——On the 16th ult., the Sheffield Tonic Sol-fa Choral Society, assisted by Miss Clelland, Mr. A. Kenningham, and Mr. Brandon, gave a performance of Haydn's Creation, in the Music Hall. There was a good attendance, particularly in the second seats and gallery. Mr. Mellor presided at the organ, and Mr. S. Hadfield acted as conductor. The choruses were rendered by 130 voices. The several parts were well sung, and the performance, as a whole, passed off very successfully, and appeared to give entire satisfaction.

Stalybridge.—The Harmonic Society gave its first performance of the season, to a very large and fashionable audience, on Thursday, the 19th ult., the Oratorio being Handel's Samson. The principal vocalists were the Misses Thorley (of Manchester), Mr. Duxbury (of Peterborough), and Mr. Thornton Wood (of Bradford). The execution of the work was in every respect thoroughly satisfactory.

Stamford.—A concert of vocal music was given in the Assembly Rooms, on the 6th ult., before a large audience. The performance was got up by Miss Goodliffe, of Stamford, who acquitted herself in such a manner as to considerably enhance her reputation as a singer. The other performers were Miss Madeline Pyne (from Manchester), Mr. Swift (of the Cathedral Choir, Peterborough), Mr. Dodman (of St. George's Choir, Stamford), and Mr. Harry Windley. Mr. Pearce, organist of St. Mary's Church, Stamford, was the accompanist. Several encores were enthusiastically demanded, and the concert was in every respect a decided success.

Stonehouse.—A successful amateur concert was given at St. George's Hall, on the 27th September, the proceeds of which were devoted to the reduction of the debt incurred for enlarging the National Schools. The principal vocalists were Mrs. R. Rendle, Mrs. Napier, Miss Ferris, Messrs. Square and Mellor, all of whom were well received, Miss Ferris eliciting an encore for her rendering of "Come il bacio del Aurora." A feature in the selection was a duet for harmonium and pianoforte, excellently played by Mrs. Graves Sawle and Mr. Löhr, and the flute performance of Mr. Benett was also much admired. Mr. Löhr conducted with his usual skill.

Stratford-on-Avon.—The Philharmonic Society's first concert of the season took place at the Shakesperean Rooms on the 3rd ult., and was attended by a numerous and fashionable audience. The concert opened with the first movement of Mozart's Symphony in D, the pianoforte part being taken by the Rev. Newton Smith, who also displayed his ability in the Overture to Tancredi, which commenced the second part of the programme. The Overture to Miranda (composed by a member of the Society, Mr. F. Baldwin) was well played by the band, and most favourably received. Mr. Maries, besides taking part in some concerted pieces, was especially successful in Weber's Concertstück. The vocalists were the Rev. Mr. Connor, Mr. Glabach, Mrs. F. Gibbs, and Miss Kate Warrilow. Miss Spratt also performed a Pianoforte Solo, by Delioux, "Carnoval Espagnol," in excellent style. The Rev. Newton Smith, who has spared no pains to introduce good music with local talent only, deserves great praise for his efforts; and he must have been highly gratified at the successful result of his exertions.

Tandragee.—A concert was given in the Town Hall on the 12th ult., by Mrs. Harper, under the immediate patronage of the Duke and Duchess of Manchester. Mrs. Harper's rendering of "Kathleen Mavourneen" and "Robert, toi que j'aime" was warmly applauded, the first obtaining an unequivocal encore. The concert-giver was ably assisted by Madile. Brousil, Messrs. Edeson, Rudolph Mayer, and T. Williams; and the musical portion of the programme was agreeably varied by some humourous readings excellently given by Mr. Leonard. The concert was attended by a large and fashionable audience, and proved highly successful.

Tranmere.—On Thursday evening, the 12th ult., a Harvest Thanksgiving Service was celebrated at St. Paul's Church. The chancel and font were tastefully decorated with flowers, &c., and the Communion table was loaded with a variety of fruit. There was full choral service, the anthem being, "O, praise God in His Holiness," by Clarke Whitfield, the two solos in which were sung by Mr. Armstrong, of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society, and Madame Billinie Porter; Miss Fanny Armstrong also assisted the choir, and Mr. Billinie Porter presided at the organ. The Rev. W. A. Tattersall, of Oxton, read prayers, and the Rev. G. A. Dean, the vicar, preached an eloquent sermon, in aid of St. Paul's Schools, from the text, "God giveth the increase." There was a large congregation.

Vale of Leven.—On Thursday evening, the 28th September, the Musical Association in connection with the Bonhill Young Men's Class, gave its first concert. This choir numbers about sixty voices; and, considering that it is only about six months since it was formed, its progress is highly creditable to the energy and musical ability of its conductor, Mr. E. B. Conner, leader of the music in the Parish Church, Bonhill. The choir was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Rushbury, from Glasgow, whose singing elicited much applause and frequent encores. The first part was devoted to sacred music; and among the pieces given were the Anthems, "In Jewry is God known," and "My God, look upon me;" and the Choruses, "Gloria" (from Mozart's Twelfth Mass), and the "Hallelujah," from the Messiah. The choral selections in the second part included "See the Chariot at hand," "Flora gave me fairest flowers," the part-song, "Sir Knight, Sir Knight, O whither away," and Bishop's Glee, "The Fisherman's good night." Mr. Rushbury presided at the pianoforte, and Mr. J. Conner (a member of the Young Men's Class) at the harmonium. There was a good attendance, and the concert was highly successful.

Wellingborough.—The Philharmonic Society's first concert took place on Wednesday evening, the 11th ult., before a large audience. The Messiah was the work selected for performance, supported by Miss Packwood as principal soprano; Mrs. Warren, of Manchester, contralto; Mr. Duxbury, of Peterborough Cathedral, tenor; and Mr. W. Packwood, bass, with a band and chorus of about 60 executants. The rendering of the Oratorio was remarkably good for the provinces, and reflected great credit on the members. Mr. W. R. Harrington conducted with much ability.

Wellington.—At an evening concert, annually given for the purpose of providing funds for the support of the Wellington National Schools, Mr. H. Lahee's Cantata, The Building of the Ship, was performed with unqualified success. The principal parts were effectively rendered by the Misses Gidley, Messrs. Ebdon and Rowe, and Mr. Knowling. There was an efficient choir, and the work was ably accompanied by Miss Warren and Mrs. H. Elworthy. The room was filled in every part.

West Hackney.—The Harvest Festival on Sunday, the 1st ult., was held in the noble Parish Church, which was beautifully decorated with corn, fruit, and flowers, and reflected great credit on those who kindly lent their aid in so good a work. The congregations, both morning and evening, were very large. Early celebration of Holy Communion took place at 8 a.m. Marbeck's Communion Service was sung, and a selection from various composers was played during celebration. Processional Hymn 223 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"), "Come ye thankful." Matins (full choral), at 11 a.m., Processional Hymn 223 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"), and Ferial Responses, by Tallis, were sung. Venite was given to Macfarren in A, Psalms to Crotch and Purcell in G, Te Deum to Ouseley in A, and Monk in G major and minor; Benedictus to a Gregorian Chant. Then followed the Anthem from Haydn's Creation, "The Heavens are telling;" after which the Holy Communion Service commenced, at which the musical order was as follows:—Introit, Hymn 348 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"); Kyrie, Robson; Credo, Marbeck; Offertory Anthem, "O sing unto God; Sanctus, Bridgwater; Gloria in excelsis, St. Mark's. The Processional Hymn, 224 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"), "Praise, O praise our God," was then sung, after which the congregation dispersed. The afternoon service commenced at 3.30 p.m., at which the Litany was sung. Evensong (full choral) commenced at 7 p.m. The Psalms were sung to Morley in A minor, Handel in G, and Hayes in F. Magnificat, Gregorian; Nunc dimittis, Gibbons in G: Anthem, "Hallelujah Chorus," from Beethoven's Engedi ("Mount of Olives"); Hymn before sermon, 125 ("Hymns Ancient and Modern"); Anthem after sermon, "Hallelujah Chorus," from Handel's Messiah. The singing at the above services was very good indeed, and showed great improvement on the last time. The musical portion of the service was conducted by Mr. F. Taylor, choir-master, and Mr. H. Ingram presided at the organ with much ability. The Processional and Recessional Hymns were the same as at the Morning Service. As the congregation dispersed, the organist played the "War March" from Mendelssohn's Athalie.

AN ENTIRELY NEW WORK FOR MUSICAL EDUCATION.

CONTAIN A PROGRESSIVE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION IN MUSIC, UPON A SYSTEM DESIGNED BY HIM.

The exercises are set at the top of each page, and blank staves are left for the pupil to copy the examples given. It is intended that the pupils should fill up the first page by copying the exercise given, and write from memory on the second blank page. Every succeeding exercise includes all that has been taught in the preceding examples. The rudiments of music are explained as simply as possible. Diagrams of the pianoforte keyboard are provided, by means of which the notes can be more easily learnt than by any other method. The fundamental rules of harmony and thorough bass are practically illustrated, and a plan laid down by which singing at sight can be learnt without assistance. The Music Copy-Books will, it is believed, be equally useful to master and pupil, by relieving the former from the necessity of constantly repeating the same rules, and ensuring the gradual progress of the latter.

Parts I. and II. contain RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC.
Parts IV. and V. contain THE RUDIMENTS OF HARMONY.
Part VI. contains INSTRUCTIONS IN VOCALISATION, PART-SINGING, AND SINGING AT SIGHT.

Price Sixpence each; postage free for 7 stamps.

CHAPPELL AND CO., 50, New Bond-street; and of all Music and Booksellers in Town and Country.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS.

For Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass.

The present collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the Favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The Words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small classes.

1.	Hymn of the Fisherman's Children	Adapted to a Melody from Herold's "Zampa."
2.	Fays and Elves (In mia fe)	... ... From Flotow's "Marta."
3.	Spring's Bright Glances (In Elvezia non v'ha)	... From Bellini's "La Sonnambula."
4.	From Yonder Vale and Hill (D'immenso giubilo)	From Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor."
5.	Here we Rest (Qui la selva)	... From Bellini's "La Sonnambula."
6.	Onward to Battle (Squilli echeggi)	... ... From Verdi's "Trovatore."
7.	Rataplan (Rataplan)	From Donizetti's "La Figlia del Reggimento."
8.	The Gipsy's Star (Vedi! le fosche)	... From Verdi's "Il Trovatore."
9.	War Song of the Druids (Dell' aura tua profetica) ...	... ... From Bellini's "Norma."
10.	In Mercy, hear us! (Cielo clemente)	From Donizetti's "La Figlia del Reggimento."
11.	Come to the Fair! (Accorete, giovinette)	... ... From Flotow's "Marta."
12.	Friendship (Per te d'immenso giubilo)	From Donizetti's "Lucia di Lammermoor."

Postage free, 1½d. each; or 3 for 3½d.

HANDEL'S CHORUSES

Arranged for the Organ, with Pedal Obbligato, EXPRESSLY for the use of AMATEURS, by Dr. Rimbault. Price 3s. each. Nos. 1 to 6 are now ready:—

No. 1. Zadok the Priest.	No. 4. He gave them hailstones.
2. From the Censer.	5. Sing unto God.
3. We never will bow down.	6. Hallelujah.

The present publication has been undertaken with a view to supply a musical want long felt by amateurs and lovers of the organ, i.e., an edition of Handel's Celebrated Choruses arranged for the organ with pedal obbligato, that shall be effective, combining all the salient parts of the score, and yet at the same time be within the reach of those performers who have not made the instrument their entire study. We have, it is true, many arrangements; some for "Organ or Pianoforte," others by our most eminent organists. The first belong to a past age; the second, in all cases, are only fit for professional performers, and require an amount of skill for their proper execution rarely attained by amateurs. In the present edition, the notation has been carefully studied so as to simplify the reading, whilst the pedals, in all cases of difficulty, have the assistance of the left hand of the performer. Many other points have been considered so as to render the arrangement fitted to the object it has in view—to supply an edition of Handel's Choruses for the Organ expressly for the amateur.

THE HYMNARY,

A BOOK OF CHURCH SONG.

EDITED BY THE

Rev. William Cooke,

HON. CANON OF CHESTER,

AND THE

Rev. Benjamin Webb,

VICAR OF S. ANDREW'S, WELLS STREET.

THE Hymnary contains 630 Hymns, of which a large number are entirely new; many being translations from the Latin, Greek, and German, done specially for it.

Several editions of "The Hymnary" in various sizes, to correspond with the Prayer Book, are in preparation, and will be issued at the lowest possible prices.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners Street (W.) and 35, Poultry (E.C.).

Preparing for Publication, and will be ready early in 1872.

THE HYMNARY,

A BOOK OF CHURCH SONG.

With Accompanying Tunes.

EDITED BY

Mr. Joseph Barnby.

THIS Edition will contain a few of the most favourite of the 17th century Tunes, and almost all the best productions of the present century, supplemented by a large number of Tunes written expressly for this work by the following Composers:—

M. CHARLES GOUNOD.	The Rev. Sir F. OUSELEY, Bart.
Sir W. STERNDALE BENNETT.	SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.
Mr. JOHN GOSS.	Mr. A. S. SULLIVAN.
Mr. JAMES TURLE.	Mr. HENRY SMART.
Mr. G. A. MACFARREN.	Dr. STEGGALL.
Mr. E. J. HOPKINS.	Mr. E. H. THORNE.
Dr. E. G. MONK.	Dr. GARRETT.
Dr. JOHN STAINER.	Dr. GAUNTLETT.
Dr. PHILIP ARMES.	Mr. BERTHOLD TOURS.
Mr. J. BAPTISTE CALKIN.	Mr. JOSEPH BARNBY and
DR. H. S. OAKELEY.	DR. WESLEY.

An Edition consisting of the Tunes alone (without the Hymns) will also be published, so as to form a Supplemental Tune Book, which may be used with any other Hymnal, and which will form in itself the most perfect collection of contemporary contributions to the Hymn music of our day.

London: Novello, Ewer and Co., 1, Berners Street (W.), and 35, Poultry (E.C.) New York: 751, Broadway.

TO THE MUSICAL PUBLIC IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

MESSRS. NOVELLO, EWER AND CO, beg to inform the public of the United States of America that they have just opened a Music Store at

751, BROADWAY,

where a large stock of every musical publication in their extensive and varied catalogue will be constantly kept. The rapid growth of musical taste in America, and the increasing desire for procuring the standard works at a moderate price, induce Messrs. Novello to believe that, although the music published by them in London could always be procured through a recognised agent in New York, the time has arrived when it is absolutely necessary to have an Establishment of their own in the City, conducted by those experienced in the London business, so that the supply of the whole of their works may always keep pace with the demand. Catalogues, with the prices rendered into American currency, will be shortly published, and may be had gratis on application.

THE OVERTURE TO MOZART'S "DON GIOVANNI."

By J. C. Lobe.

[To save space, the examples, in most cases, are only indicated by the number of the bar. By numbering the bars of the allegro in a pianoforte copy, they will be easily referred to.]

This last period (103 to 110) is one of the most wonderfully telling passages which instrumental music has ever produced. The figure of one boldly and fearlessly striding through life is vividly brought to the imagination by the basses and tenors. The feelings experienced by one so light minded are symbolised by the violins; and at the same time the admonitions perseveringly and imploringly tendered by loving women are expressed by the wind instruments. How exactly in accordance with fact is the idea conceived; how truthfully and beautifully it is expressed; what a clear representation of three different sentiments in one tone-picture, which, from a technical point of view, consists of three melodies, neither one of which predominates over the others!
